

#174

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF FLORIDA

CASE NO.: SC22-796

FIFTH PRESENTMENT OF THE TWENTY-FIRST STATEWIDE GRAND JURY

We have now spent approximately 450 hours in session, and interviewed more than one hundred witnesses, some from as near as Polk County and others from as far away as Mexico, California, Argentina, and Panama. We consulted experts in multiple fields, academics, law enforcement officers past and present, defense attorneys, bureaucrats, intelligence officers, whistleblowers, ranchers, teachers, doctors, journalists, caseworkers, financial analysts, NGO employees, executives, treatment professionals, veterans, immigration judges and lawyers, victims, activists, immigrants, and even criminal defendants; we owe each of them a debt of thanks for giving us their time and attention. We watched hours of video, read stacks of materials now several feet thick, directed investigations and gave every effort to understanding, summarizing, and attempting to answer the questions posed to us by our Supreme Court. This is our fifth report.

The Order empaneling our jury instructs us to focus on those who arrive illegally to our country and thence to our state, those individuals or organizations who assist this enterprise, and certain crimes that might be committed en route to or following arrival in Florida. Our mandate is NOT to rewrite federal immigration policy; rather, it is to explore whether there is criminal activity affecting our State, how it is made possible, and what, if anything, might be done by our state leaders to address it.¹

We felt obligated to investigate sufficiently to determine that we had an accurate picture of the conditions at our nation's southern, northern, and coastal borders which might produce these effects. We learned that, if anything, many Floridians are (just as we were before undertaking this inquiry) almost dangerously naïve and unaware of the true magnitude and malevolence of the illegal immigration industry. What we discovered has been at varying times sobering, upsetting, depressing, and the cause of significant outrage.

¹ We will focus on illegal immigration, not claims of refugee status, visa admissions, Temporary Protected Status, or other means of entry except to note them in context with the numbers entering or remaining other than lawfully; we also focus on illegal immigration specifically to our country and state, as opposed to generalized worldwide movement.

The short answer is that there are most certainly crimes being committed, including by some of our fellow state residents, which abet transnational and local criminal organizations and individuals in their trafficking of people (including and especially children), criminal actors, fraudulent documents, and drugs into our state, extracting money in return. These crimes are sometimes actually enabled by governmental agencies, policies, and activities; and there are things that can be done about them.

We are also convinced that, because the driving forces are largely federal policies, and political incentives seem to not prioritize solving the problems, it will be up to Florida and other states to help themselves, at least in the short term. We herein propose several ways that might happen.

A WORD ABOUT RETALIATION

“I am a firm believer in the people. If given the truth, they can be depended upon to meet any national crisis. The great point is to bring them the real facts.”

—Abraham Lincoln

We have met with a number of courageous individuals who provided us with testimony and other evidence despite knowing they would be, and in some cases had already been, targeted for retaliation by their NGO (Non-Government Organization) and/or government agency employer if their cooperation were made public.

While we have kept their identities confidential, they know who they are. We hope they also know they have our gratitude for being willing to meet and share their stories with us, even at personal cost.

We consider it despicable that government agencies such as HHS, ACF, ORR, and DHS, as well as NGOs funded by grants of taxpayer money, would seek to prevent us from gathering information. This is, however, a pattern; last year the HHS Office of Inspector General found that HHS treatment of multiple other whistleblowers “may have risen to the level of whistle-blower chilling.”

We are aware that other witnesses were ordered by bureaucrats and their lawyers not to appear, to refuse to provide some documents or answer some questions, or to withhold information and subject themselves to contempt and jail even in the face of subpoenas issued under the auspices of the Supreme Court of Florida. No one in the public is served by such behavior, and those responsible for actively impeding our investigation should be ashamed.

We are heartened that some defied these directives and appeared anyway. We know the price some of these witnesses have paid. While this obfuscation made it more difficult to gather a full perspective of the situation, these rogue agencies should know we nonetheless found it possible. And since our previous reports have exposed profound ineptitude (at best) or malfeasance in several of those agencies, we now understand why they did not want to be questioned. Government employees theoretically work for the citizens they serve; some have exemplified that, while some clearly need reminding.

I. INFLUX, IN FLUX

To understand the context in which these things are occurring, we sought to learn what policies appeared to be in place which might be described as “root causes” of fluctuations in migration to this country, and whether those policies appear to be deterring, encouraging, or exacerbating the activity we describe herein. Without overtly commenting² on the wisdom of particular choices, we believe we have more than enough information to ascertain (a) which policies are currently in effect and (b) what outcomes those policies produce both in countries outside our borders, and within our own country and state.

These are the policies, and these are their effects.

WHY

It has long been a matter of common sense and national policy that, in the words of one former President:

“We simply cannot allow people to pour into the United States undetected, undocumented, unchecked, and circumventing the line of people who are waiting patiently, diligently, and lawfully to become aliens in this country.”

-Barack Obama (2005)

However, in January, 2023, the current President signed and publicly touted the “Declaration of North America,” which referenced several prior announcements and included the following language:

The three countries of North America each made ambitious commitments under the Los Angeles Declaration, including working together to advance labor mobility in North America, particularly regarding regular pathways, and have been delivering on these commitments. Since June, Mexico, the United States and Canada have collectively welcomed record numbers of aliens and refugees from the Western Hemisphere under new and expanded labor and humanitarian programs. Today, we affirm our joint commitment to safe, orderly, and humane migration[.]

The “Declaration” reiterates policies set forth previously in a series of four Executive Orders from 2021, EO 10410-10413, the first being titled Creating a

² Certainly, we have opinions about the wisdom of some of these policies, informed by our year-long investigation. We do not need to express them all to answer the questions posed to us.

Comprehensive Regional Framework To Address the Causes of Migration, To Manage Migration Throughout North and Central America, and To Provide Safe and Orderly Processing of Asylum Seekers at the United States Border.

These policies are explicitly designed to encourage people to leave their countries of origin and come the United States for economic benefit; in short, as will be explained, these executive-branch policies affirmatively contravene longstanding statutory and Constitutional laws, as repeatedly interpreted by federal and state courts of every level.

The policies, via the public pronouncements of the Executive branch, including the Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security, place emphasis on “processing efficiency,” with expediency as a goal in itself, in order to:

“Increase processing efficiency” and “streamline processing” to “further facilitate safe and orderly inspection of noncitizens”; and,

“Increase civilian processing personnel” to “perform those functions” and enhance “processing efficiency.”

Efficiency is not synonymous with safety, intelligence, or integrity. It appears to be the current policy’s desired end, rather than its means. Rather than discourage or at least reduce the magnitude of the current mass relocation movement, the announced policies only seek to “streamline” it and make it “more efficient.”

Others have compounded the effects: for example, the Mayor of New York City addressed the legislature of the Mexican state of Puebla with these words:

We are neighbors. We are familia. Mi casa es su casa. Your struggles are my struggles.

We have received ample evidence and testimony, both expert and eyewitness-- including from some who were born outside this country themselves-- that those in foreign lands share sophisticated communications networks and pay heed to policy announcements such as those listed above. We can hardly blame them for interpreting such statements as an invitation to trek to this country specifically to be “efficiently processed” to “advance their labor mobility.”

HOW

A. CAPITALIZATION

Our federal government also speaks with its pocketbook. Once here, many of those claiming asylum (of whom as much as 50% fail to even appear for a hearing; once finally held, almost 90% of those who do appear are found to have no credible claim deserving asylum status)³ qualify for and receive benefits during their period of residence such as Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF), Supplemental Nutrition Assistance (SNAP), Medicaid, Women, Infants, and Children (WIC) benefits, and public school education (including breakfast and lunch programs). These benefits can be claimed for years, even after an alien⁴ is ordered removed by the courts. Of course, many primarily come looking for jobs, which generally pay far better than those at home.

The availability of so many benefits seems bound to provoke the response we have seen. According to our law enforcement witnesses at both the state and federal levels, more than 2,400 aliens (not including UAC) have been shipped by the federal government to just two sections of Florida in the first week of November, 2023; at that rate, more than 100,000 will have joined our population this calendar year. The States of Illinois and Massachusetts and the cities of Chicago, Washington D.C., and New York have all declared a State of Emergency due to a tiny fraction of this population arriving within their borders; New York City has actually begun giving them plane tickets to a destination of their choice in other parts of the world.

B. MANIPULATION

Billions of dollars of grant funds are disbursed every year by federal agencies to Non-Government Organizations (NGOs)⁵, many of which also receive financial aid from groups affiliated with the United Nations. These monies are not spent accountably. For example, on March 28, 2023, the DHS Inspector General released a report following its audit of funds awarded to FEMA's Emergency Food and Shelter Program, used by NGOs to assist illegal aliens encountered at the southern border. Of $12.9 million examined, the NGO awardees were unable to account to the DHSOIG for $7.4 million (58%). Nonetheless, FEMA's Shelter and Services Program (SSP) for NGOs sent another $77 million, bringing the total to around $291 million this year alone. We also heard from witnesses and examined annual reports from some of these NGOs, learning that in some cases more than 70% of their funds were spent on salaries (with many executives making several hundred thousand dollars annually) and "expenses" unrelated to actual alien service.

⁴ 8 U.S.C. 1101(3), the Immigration and Nationality Act, employs this term throughout, as will we: "The term 'alien' means any person not a citizen or national of the United States."

The DHS Secretary also recently requested an additional $1.4 billion to do more of the same:

We are taking steps to speed work authorizations for those who are eligible. The supplemental request includes ... An additional $1.4 billion in SSP [Shelter and Services Program] grants to local governments and non-profits for temporary food, shelter, and other services for recently arrived aliens.

The river of accountability-free money has absolutely polluted the entire process.

Given the breadth of our mandate, we focused on transnational criminal organizations and illegal immigration (detailed further at other sections of this report); we discovered, however, that there are also "legal" organizations who appear to be misusing federal contract monies and their "nonprofit" status in order to abet the process, and likely the actors, responsible for the illegal activity we are describing. In fact, several NGOs actively obstructed our investigation, refusing to provide subpoenaed information and refusing to answer some direct questions (supposedly under orders from the federal government, in the person of the Agency for Children and Families, a subsidiary of the Department of Health and Human Services)⁶. They (or at least the multiple lawyers they hired, whose correspondence we reviewed) know the law regarding our jury's term of service; they know that even if we sought to have them held in contempt, they could delay final court action until

⁶ We at least have company. The Chair of the House Committee on Homeland Security wrote to DHS on August 21, 2023:

As outlined in my August 3 letter, over the course of several months, the Committee made numerous attempts to accommodate the Department's production of the documents and information at issue. The requests from the April 27 letter, however, remain unsatisfied and are now 102 days delinquent with no definitive timeline for production. Most recently, when the Committee offered another telephone meeting to secure a production schedule, the Department ignored the Committee's offer and instead has continued to cast doubt on any definitive timeline for future production. This demonstrated approach to indefinitely protract production necessitates the enclosed subpoena.

our term expires, successfully “running out the clock.”⁷ We recommend that our leaders consider the formation of another Statewide Grand Jury solely to investigate their questionable activities within Florida and their operations outside our borders which result in the use of taxpayer and donor funds to break, and help others to break, both federal and state laws.

These NGOs do not truly or exclusively operate as humanitarians. They do not spend federal grant money to convince alien populations not to risk a life-threatening odyssey. Rather, they magnify the magnetic illusion of economic prosperity at the end of a migratory trek. They provide cash cards, cell phones, and transport vehicles and what amount to safari-style guide maps through portions of jungle and across deadly terrain, increasing the number of individuals who thus elect to make the journey and enabling Transnational Criminal Organizations to amass fabulous wealth and a bottomless pool of victims in the process. As far back as 2017, DHS and the Rand Corporation found that up to two thirds of aliens from the Northern Triangle hired smugglers to get to our borders, profiting smuggling organizations well over $2 billion just from these countries. Those numbers have jumped astronomically with the advance of time and increased population flow.

C. DEPRIVATION

We received eyewitness testimony from individuals who live in Panama and others who have made this very journey recently and they recounted the conditions we report herein: the interminable trudge across unforgiving jungle mountains, the tiny boats and crowded buses, the endless caravans of people from all parts of the planet, the Mexican train referred to as “The Beast,” and every gory detail of the inhumane conditions; one was even struck by disease and kidnapped by an armed gang in Mexico just prior to reaching the U.S. border. CNN described a portion of the level of unrelenting misery involved in this journey:

Masked robbers and rapists. Exhaustion, snakebites, broken ankles. Murder and hunger. Having to choose who to help and who to leave behind.

Almost 250,000 people made the crossing in 2022, fueled by economic and humanitarian disasters – nearly double the figures from the year before, and

⁷ Likewise, we will not identify these groups here by name. If we were to do so, Florida law gives them the right to ask the courts to conceal this entire report (and the right to appeal any adverse decision), and thereby delay its release—and we have no doubt they would exercise this right. We may instead identify them in a separate report. If the publication of that report is delayed, readers will know how, why, and who is responsible.

20 times the annual average from 2010 to 2020. Early data for 2023 shows six times as many made the trek from January to March, 87,390 compared to 13,791 last year, a record, according to Panamanian authorities.

Along the way, it became evident that the cartel overseeing the route is making millions off a highly organized smuggling business, pushing as many people as possible through what amounts to a hole in the fence for migrants moving north, the distant American dream their only lodestar.

But many are naïve to what lies ahead. They've been told that the days of trekking are few and easy, and they can pack light. But money, not prayer, will decide who will survive the journey. This cash has made an already omnipotent cartel even more powerful. This seems to be a no-go area for the Colombian government.

Migrants at the Acandí Seco camp are given pink wristbands – like those handed out in a nightclub – denoting their right to walk here. ... People are the new commodity for cartels, perhaps preferable to drugs. These human packages move themselves. Rivals do not try to steal them. Each migrant pays at least $400 for access to the jungle passage and absorbs all the risks themselves. According to CNN's calculations, the smuggling trade earns the cartel tens of millions of dollars annually....

The volume of children is staggering. Some are carried, others dragged by the hand. The 66-mile route through the Darién Gap is a minefield of lethal snakes, slimy rock, and erratic riverbeds, that challenges most adults, leaving many exhausted, dehydrated, sick, injured, or worse....

Yet the number of children is growing. A record 40,438 crossed last year, Panamanian migration data shows. UNICEF reported late last year that half of them were under five, and around 900 were unaccompanied. In January and February of this year, Panama recorded 9,683 minors crossing, a seven-fold increase compared to the same period in 2022. In March, the number hit 7,200.

The main, older route, via a crossing called Las Texas, had become littered with discarded clothes, tents, refuse and even corpses....

Wilson, aged about five, he has been separated from his parents. They gave him to a porter to carry, who raced ahead. Wilson shakes his head emphatically when asked if he is going to the US. "To Miami," he says. "Dad is going to build a swimming pool."...

Jose barks chilling advice: “Take care of your children! A friend or anyone could take your child and sell their organs. Don’t give them over to a stranger.”...

Around 2,200 Chinese citizens made the trek in January and February this year – more than in all of 2022, according to Panamanian government data....

Like many here, Natalia says she was told the walk would be a lot shorter – only two hours’ descent ahead, she says. The scale of the deceit has begun to emerge, and the ground is about to literally turn on them. Jean-Pierre was told the whole walk would last 48 hours. “Right now, I don’t have enough food,” he says. Natalia, who has been reunited with her daughter, Anna, says she was told the descent to the boats from the summit would last only two days. It will be at least three. “No, your daughter can walk, this is easy,” she says she was told by a Colombian guide. “But it’s not... since then, all I do is pay and pay,” she sobs. She and Anna are unable to move forward and are running short on food....

Standing on the riverbank, watching others stumble through the water, Carolina, from Venezuela, weeps. “Had I known, I would not have come or let my son come through here,” she says. “This is horrible. You have to live this to realize crossing through this jungle is the worst thing in the world.”... “I regret putting my son through this jungle of hell so much that I have had to cry to let it all out because I risked his life and mine,” she adds, gazing toward the river...

We soon stumble upon a few of them. A corpse wearing a yellow soccer jersey and wristband, his skull exposed. Further up the path, a foot can be seen sticking out from under a tent – a makeshift cross left nearby in hurried memorial. Elsewhere, the body of a woman, her arm cradling her head. [A]necdotal reports suggest that many who die on the route are never found or reported...

Another mile upstream is what appears to be a crime scene. Three bodies lie on the ground, each about 100 yards from each other. The first is a man, face down on the roots of a tree, rotting on a pathway. The other two are women. One is inside a tent, on her back, her legs spread apart. The third is concealed from the other two behind a fallen tree along the riverbank. She lies face down, found by migrants, according to photographs taken three weeks earlier, with her bra pushed up around her head. There are injuries around her groin and a rope by her body...

A forensic pathologist who studied photographs of the scene at CNN's request and didn't want to be named discussing a sensitive issue, said there were likely signs of a violent death in the case of the one woman with a rope near her body, and the other two bodies – the man and woman – likely, “did not die of natural causes.”...

Jorge, who is on his second bid to cross into the US, where his brother lives in New Jersey. His first attempt ended with deportation back to Venezuela. Both of his journeys have been marred by violence. Just days earlier, further up the old route near the Colombian border, men in ski masks robbed his group...

“When we were coming down Cañas Blancas, three guys came out, hooded, with guns, knives, machetes. They wanted $100 and those that didn't have it had to stay. They hit me and another guy - they jumped on him and kicked him,” he said, adding the group had to borrow from other walkers to pay the $100. “That's the story of the Darién. Some of us run with luck. Others with God's will. And those that don't pass, well they stay and that's the way of the jungle...”

And when they finally reach the boats, their ordeal is not over, but extended. Lines curve along the riverbank for each canoe – wooden vessels known as “piraguas” crammed full of migrants each paying $20 a head. The boats arrive constantly, perhaps six at a time, to cater to the volume of migrants – each making $300 when full.

“When I got here in the early morning, only four buses left,” Manuel says. Next to him, one of his sons vomits onto the plastic mattress they are all trying to rest on. “The oldest, 5-year-old, has diarrhea, fever and [has been] throwing up since yesterday. Our 1-year-old has heat stroke. All that we want is a bus,” he says.

A pregnant woman adds: “We've been here for nine days. I'll be close to giving birth here. They don't give us answers. They have us working and don't give us a 'yes, it's [time] for you to leave.' In the end, they lie to us.”

Diarrhea, lice, colds – the complaints grow. They point towards the appalling hygiene of the shower blocks, where dirty water just drains onto the ground outside. The nearby wash basins are worse: no water and human feces on the floor.

“The whole point of surviving the jungle was for an easier way forwards, and now all we are is stuck,” says Manuel. “I was starting to have nightmares. My wife was the strong one. I collapsed.”

Their dream of freedom must wait, for now replaced by servitude to a system designed to make them pay, wait, and risk – each in enough measure to drain their cash slowly from them, and keep them moving forward to the next hurdle.

<https://www.cnn.com/2023/04/15/americas/darien-gap-migrants-colombia-panama-whole-story-cmd-intl/index.html>

We have seen charts and advisory pamphlets showing aliens possible routes of travel (none of which warn, for example, that the territory about to be entered is controlled by violent cartels) handed out by NGOs. We have seen makeshift and expanded “camps” set up as way stations in the middle of places like the Panamanian jungle to help ferry aliens up the Central American peninsula. We have seen the signs on these soft-sided structures advertising the names of these organizations.

We have seen videos showing the squalor of these camps and the treacherous, muddy, disease-infested and flooded conditions through which these people travel. We have seen the virtual destruction of native settlements by erection of NGO way stations which effectively drown the native village in a tsunami of human misery. We have seen the United Nations International Organization for Migration (UN-IOM) branded “rape kits” containing condoms, a whistle, and “morning after pills” funded by the U.S. Department of State, and other items these groups distribute to females, knowing in advance that many of them will be raped along the way; we have been shown the “rape trees” on which cartels and gang members hang their “trophy” lingerie in the deserts of Mexico and Texas. Doctors Without Borders published a recent survey wherein 68% of women, and 17% of men, reported being sexually abused during their trip to this country; testimony before the House Subcommittee on Oversight of DHS in 2021 put that figure at 80%.

We have reviewed videos and photos of fashionably-attired or fully weaponized cartel representatives transacting “business” in these villages, and the massive amounts of trash and debris left behind in what was pristine jungle or choking once-fertile watersheds. We have seen and heard people being robbed, beaten, raped, maimed and murdered (including being beheaded or doused in gasoline and burned alive); we have viewed gun battles between Panamanian defense forces and the cartels and paramilitary gangs that control virtually every section of the route; we have seen these criminals selling children into bondage and burning dismembered torsos of aliens who literally walked into their trap courtesy of these NGOs. We have seen the bodies literally strewn along a trail “parents” force their children to pass and corpses stacked like cordwood in the backs of sun-baked semitrailers. We have seen airplanes packed full of unaccompanied alien children, fleets of boats brimming with passengers to the point of capsizing heading up muddy reptile-infested rivers and swamps, convoys of buses traversing rutted dirt roads and trains overflowing with travelers stacked on rooftops of railcars, hanging off siderails, or getting their legs chopped off under the wheels. And we have seen “parents” physically force wailing children through barbed concertina wire and across predator- and disease-infested bodies of water, with not just the blessing but the active assistance of NGOs spending billions of federal dollars.

One of the most difficult portions of this route from South America is the Darien Gap, a jungle covering the connection of Central and South America. Panama’s National Immigration Service documented over 400,000 people attempting to traverse this terrain last year, by far the highest number ever recorded. The United Nations Missing Migrants Project reported that in 2022, 1,457 fatalities were confirmed to have occurred along routes to the Americas, marking not only the deadliest year in recent history but terming “the growing death toll a humanitarian emergency of great dimension[.]” Even so, the Project was careful to note that its data likely represented a massive undercount (“due to the great challenges for data collection”), perhaps representing only half the true toll (based on surveys of people actually passing along the routes).

Psychological services are offered by NGOs for those previously refused entry at the U.S. border after failing their credible fear interviews in which psychologists help asylum seekers retrieve “repressed memories of trauma,” so that they could return to the U.S. border for a second attempt. Pamphlets from the UN-IOM and UN High Commissioner on Refugees contain instructions on how to successfully answer asylum-related questions to thus circumvent U.S. law.

D. EXPLOITATION

None of this is “safe,” “dignified,” “regular,” or “humanitarian.” It is a massive tragedy, funded with monies from our national treasury, and it is disheartening that much of it could be labeled “Made in U.S.A.” If these actions occurred within our borders, many of these individuals would be arrested for human trafficking, human smuggling, immigration fraud, child abuse, and manslaughter, to name just a few of the atrocities we have witnessed. Yet our government and its NGO collaborators do not use these billions of contract-granted funds to reduce the massive flow of people or dissuade them from undertaking a trip that will cost many their health and personal safety if not their very lives; the reality is quite the opposite.

E. CORRUPTION AND EXTORTION

Besides enriching cartels and TCOs by funding and encouraging this debacle, current U.S. policies have apparently prompted foreign governments to also engage in profiteering:

- Government officials in Colombia are selling organized “guided tours” to various points along the most common routes of travel out of their country.
- Nicaragua does not require visas to enter from other countries, and the president of Nicaragua has used 260 charter planes full of aliens from Haiti (approximately 31,000 Haitians and 17,000 Cubans) to charge between $3,000 and $5,000 each to permit the aliens to land in Nicaragua and make their way north to the U.S. border. Nicaragua is seeking a loosening of sanctions imposed by the United States in order to reimpose restrictions on this flow, much as Venezuela did last year. The Haitian government canceled the flights.
- HSI conducted a joint human smuggling interdiction operation in 2022 which resulted in the rescue of 77 migrants and the arrests of six employees of the federal migration service for Panama.
- The New York Times reported that in October, the Costa Rican government declared a national emergency and formed a plan with Panama to shuttle migrants from its southern border to its northern one. ...Similar busing programs have also emerged in parts of Honduras and Mexico. The buses in Costa Rica transport an average of 1,600 people per day or more than 11,000 per week. There are some weeks when the total is closer to 14,000.

- President Rodrigo Chaves of Costa Rica just visited the White House in August where “The two leaders reaffirmed our commitment to advance the goals outlined in the Los Angeles Declaration on Migration and Protection. In support of these efforts and to stabilize flows and offer opportunities to migrants and refugees, the Department of State is contributing more than $12 million through international organization partners in Costa Rica.” ...In Panama, each person must pay $60 to be bused to Costa Rica’s main terminal. They then must pay another $30 to board a shuttle that will take them to the Nicaraguan border. The fees are collected by the bus companies, which are licensed by the governments.... A Costa Rican police coordinator told the NY Times, “This migration flow couldn’t be stopped, it can’t be prohibited, but it can be administered.” The president of Costa Rica’s chamber of tourism affirmed: “At least this bus system gets the problem elsewhere rather than keeping it here.”
- Multiple countries along this route now count as a significant portion of national Gross Domestic Product (GDP) funds wired to them from places in the United States (discussed further below). Mexico, for example, received more than 57 billion dollars from United States wire transfers last year alone.

We recognize that some of these countries are faced with a Hobson’s choice; they are going to be overrun with travelers who are crashing their borders in a quest to get to the United States. Countries caught in between can either try to resist this flow (none of them have anywhere near the resources and capability to do so by themselves), or make the best of what U.S. policies are forcing upon them.

Thus, foreign governments, with the help of NGOs and the willing participation of agencies of our federal government, are not only turbocharging this process, they are directly profiting from it.

These are the policies.

And these are their effects.

II. ASYLUM AND PAROLE: THERE'S AN APP FOR THAT

The testimony and evidence we received, from migrant and alien interviews and virtually every single source and witness, was that the overwhelming majority of those arriving at the border to our country who eventually claim to be seeking asylum say they do so because they are pursuing a “better life,” defined as one with economic opportunities not present in their home countries.⁸ This is confirmed by examination of the pattern of remittances returned to assist family and friends in home countries, and the massive portions of Gross Domestic Product (GDP) those remittances constitute in the home countries (described below).

And yet, as this country’s highest courts have repeatedly made clear, our laws do not grant asylum for such purposes, which is why, according to public statistics and the sworn testimony of multiple witnesses (immigration defense lawyers, academics and professors, expert witnesses, and law enforcement officials both state and federal) more than 90% of these individuals rightly lose their claims and become court-ordered for deportation:

“[N]either economic hardship nor generalized violence can form the basis for a successful asylum claim. See 8 U.S.C. 1158(b)(1)(B)(i); Melgar de Torres v. Reno, 191 F.3d 307, 314 (2d Cir. 1999).

Lopez-Cabrera v. Garland, 20-2954-AG, 2021 WL 5105839, at *2 (2d Cir. Nov. 3, 2021).

“It was clear at the outset ... that [petitioner's] claim for asylum was based solely on economic reasons, and therefore would not merit relief.”

Freza v. Attorney Gen. United States, 49 F.4th 293, 300 (3d Cir. 2022).

“For economic deprivation to constitute persecution, “an asylum applicant must offer some proof that he suffered a deliberate imposition of substantial economic disadvantage.”

Maldonado-Luna v. Garland, 20-868, 2022 WL 468511, at *1 (2d Cir. Feb. 16, 2022).

Moreover, as reflected in 8 U.S.C. 1324, which was recently upheld by the United States Supreme Court,⁹ anyone who

(iv) encourages or induces an alien to come to, enter, or reside in the United States, knowing or in reckless disregard of the fact that such coming to, entry, or residence is or will be in violation of law; or ...

(2) Any person who, knowing or in reckless disregard of the fact that an alien has not received prior official authorization to come to, enter, or reside in the United States, brings to or attempts to bring to the United States in any manner whatsoever, such alien, regardless of any official action which may later be taken with respect to such alien shall, for each alien in respect to whom a violation of this paragraph occurs—

(A) be fined in accordance with title 18 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

The most recent census data, as well as multiple reports we have reviewed, indicate that close to 1,000,000 individuals currently residing in our state are illegally present in the country, having crossed the international border (via land or sea) at some place other than a designated port of entry.

It is, in fact, a federal crime to enter our country in such a fashion. §8 U.S.C. 1325 unequivocally states that

Any alien who (1) enters or attempts to enter the United States at any time or place other than as designated by immigration officers, or (2) eludes examination or inspection by immigration officers, or (3) attempts to enter or

After concluding that this statute criminalizes immigration advocacy and other protected speech, the Ninth Circuit held it unconstitutionally overbroad under the First Amendment. That was error. Properly interpreted, this provision forbids only the intentional solicitation or facilitation of certain unlawful acts. It does not ‘prohibi[t] a substantial amount of protected speech’—let alone enough to justify throwing out the law’s ‘plainly legitimate sweep[.]’” United States v. obtains entry to the United States by a willfully false or misleading representation or the willful concealment of a material fact, shall, for the first commission of any such offense, be fined under title 18 or imprisoned not more than 6 months, or both, and, for a subsequent commission of any such offense, be fined under title 18, or imprisoned not more than 2 years, or both.

Our Congress and our Courts recognize, and have always recognized, that even comparatively wealthy countries still have limits to their resources and cannot support an infinite number of individuals who simply want to take advantage of superior economic situations. Our executive bureaucracy, however, appears to have lost this thread, and continues to make proclamations and fund organizations which persistently advertise to individuals that they are certain, contrary to our actual laws, to obtain economic benefits if they survive the trip to our border. Accordingly, our immigration courts have a backlog of 2.2 million cases for a mere 659 judges,¹⁰ and the average wait to get a hearing on an asylum claim can exceed five years.

During most of this period, many aliens are permitted to remain inside our borders and will either obtain a work permit (after waiting several months) or work illegally. Most aliens know this; the evidence and testimony we reviewed reflected a common theme of people believing they would do as much work as they could for as long as they could and, if actually deported, they often vowed to return to do it again.¹¹ Then-USBP Chief Raul Ortiz testified that increases in migration result “when there are no consequences” and migrant populations believe they will be released into the country. He is correct. Moreover, once here, even those determined to have no lawful claim are rarely removed;¹² when it occurs, removal is simply experienced as a cost of doing business.

¹⁰ We learned recently that DHS has actually adopted a rule to permit asylum decisions to be made by government bureaucratic workers, not judges. In these cases, aliens immediately gain access to work privileges and other benefits and are given an expedited decision in a matter of weeks. If the officer grants asylum, the alien is admitted. If the officer does not, the alien gets back in line to await a judge. This entire process seems questionable, as we explain later.

¹¹ This includes an enterprising cadre of drug dealers from a small village in Honduras, who have essentially completely taken over the narcotics trade in a section of the city of San Francisco and constantly recycle their membership while building extravagant homes in their Honduran village, as documented in a series of excellent articles by the San Francisco Chronicle.

¹²The United States House of Representatives Subcommittee on Immigration Integrity, Security, and Enforcement found in an October 2023 report that 99.7% who entered without a valid claim still remained due to the lack of priority placed on their removal—a fact which, as we previously noted, those in other countries are well aware of.

As explained by a federal court here in Florida,

Under §1225(b)(1)(A), certain arriving aliens, including those who lack proper admission documents, are subject to expedited removal “without further hearing or review.” However, if such an alien indicates an intention to apply for asylum or a fear of persecution, the alien “shall be detained” pending a final determination of asylum or credible fear of persecution. See 8 U.S.C. §1225(b)(1)(B)(ii), (b)(1)(B)(iii)(IV) (emphasis added). For all other arriving aliens, unless an immigration official determines that the alien is clearly and beyond a doubt entitled to be admitted, the alien “shall be detained” for removal proceedings. See 8 U.S.C. §1225(b)(2)(A) (emphasis added). In 2018, in Jennings v. Rodriguez, the Supreme Court held that “§§1225(b)(1) and (b)(2) mandate detention of aliens throughout the completion of applicable proceedings and not just until the moment those proceedings begin.” 138 S. Ct. 830, 845 (2018) (emphasis added).

State of Florida v. United States of America, et al., Case No. 3:21-cv-1066-TKW-ZCB (N.D. FL, March 8, 2023)(emphasis added). The Court also found that:

The evidence establishes that in late January or early February of 2021, DHS made a discrete change in detention policy from “release only if there is a compelling reason to” to “release unless there is a compelling reason not to.”

According to 8 C.F.R. 1225 (the Immigration and Nationality Act),

In the case of all other arriving aliens, except those detained under § 235.3(b) or (c) of this chapter and paragraph (b) of this section, those officials listed in paragraph (a) of this section may, after review of the individual case, parole into the United States temporarily in accordance with section 212(d)(5)(A) of the Act, any alien applicant for admission, under such terms and conditions, including those set forth in paragraph (d) of this section, as he or she may deem appropriate. An alien who arrives at a port-of-entry and applies for parole into the United States for the sole purpose of seeking adjustment of status under section 245A of the Act, without benefit of advance authorization as described in paragraph (f) of this section shall be denied parole and detained for removal in accordance with the provisions of § 235.3(b) or (c) of this chapter. An alien seeking to enter the United States for the sole purpose of applying for adjustment of status under section 210 of the Act shall be denied parole and detained for removal under § 235.3(b) or (c) of this chapter, unless the alien has been recommended for approval of such application for adjustment by a consular officer at an Overseas Processing Office.

This, however, is not happening. "Parole" is, as discussed above, supposedly permitted only upon "review of [each] individual case." However, current policy applies parole protection to entire classes, nationalities, and groups of aliens en masse. As the Florida v. United States court found,

The time estimates in the supplemental administrative record confirm that USBP is not conducting meaningful case-by-case analysis before placing releasing [sic] an individual under the Parole+ATD policy. The supplemental administrative record indicates that the "processing time" for issuing a NTA is between 2 to 2.5 hours, whereas Parole+ATD only takes 15 to 30 minutes. It is implausible that USBP could meaningfully assess an alien's individual circumstances in 15 to 30 minutes... Another problem with this argument is that the supplemental administrative record does not explain how...CBP officers can make a meaningful determination as to whether the alien is a security risk (as contemplated by the regulation) if the alien's home country does not share its criminal history databases with the United States.

This latter point applies especially to countries generally viewed as hostile or subject to sanctions (such as China and Iran); several witnesses pointed out the alarming and dramatic increase of such individuals being encountered at our borders during the past fiscal year. Last year's inflow included 52,000 Chinese, a 1,300% increase from the prior fiscal year.

When sued over these policies (as has happened in multiple jurisdictions, including Florida), rather than end programs found to be illegal, DHS simply renames the programs, often with an expansion. When Texas won an injunction in federal court to prevent federal agents from cutting barbed wire fencing erected by the State to stop illegal crossings (trespassings onto Texas land) between ports of entry, the federal government employed heavy tractors to instead lift it out of the way so aliens could crawl beneath it. When Arizona deployed barriers of cargo containers to block illegal entry, or Texas installed a buoy system to block dangerous river crossings, the federal government sued to have them removed.

Some 280,000 aliens have been paroled into the United States at the land border ports after scheduling crossing appointments with the "CPB One" mobile phone app¹³ as of August, 2023. 95% of them received parole into our country. Of that total, only 136,000 came from Cuba, Haiti, Venezuela, and Nicaragua, the countries originally designated for use of this program. More than 100,000 came from one of 93 other countries. More than 57,000 are Mexican nationals. Mexican citizens almost never qualify for U.S. protections and are rejected for asylum at a rate of 96 percent. Also included are 3,852 Kyrgyzstanis, 1,843 Uzbekistanis, 780 Tajikistanis, and 339 Kazakhstanis, and 29 from Turkmenistan; among the groups operating in those countries are the Islamic Jihad Union, the Islamic Movement of Uzbekistan, and ISIS-Khorasan.

Also included were nearly 24,000 Russians, 1,086 Armenians, 888 from Belarus, 244 from Azerbaijan, and dozens from mainland China and Mongolia. Other countries of note were South Africa, Togo, Gabon, Namibia, Guinea-Bissau, Argentina, Chile, Ecuador, Bolivia, Suriname, Guyana, France, Spain, Greece, Poland, Hungary, Canada, the United Kingdom, British Indian Ocean Territory, Iran, Lebanon, Jordan, Egypt, Yemen, Indonesia, Senegal, and Mauritania.

These include many “Special Interest Aliens,” designated not as terrorists themselves but, because they come from nations where terrorist groups are prevalent, are required to be subjected to enhanced screening. More than 75,000 SIAs were among those crossing illegally between October 2022 and August 2023.

According to data obtained and analyzed by the Transactional Records Access Clearinghouse (TRAC) at Syracuse University,

These numbers are in addition to a record number of Notices to Appear to aliens who were found inadmissible under U.S. law. Notices to Appear (NTAs), which put immigrants into removal proceedings within the immigration courts, were rarely used at ports of entry until 2021. Unlike Border Patrol, which is responsible for immigration enforcement between ports of entry, the Office of Field Operations (OFO) is a separate agency responsible for processing people at ports of entry. OFO issued 280,000 NTAs in the first 10 months of FY 2023, a significant increase from 95,000 the previous year and up from about 48,000 five years ago in FY 2018.

These are in addition to some 221,000 aliens flown directly into U.S. airports (through mid-September) under a different parole program. Finally, we learned that in many cases, aliens apprehended crossing the border illegally, who upon capture begin to assert a claim for asylum, are being permitted to withdraw that claim (rather than be immediately detained or removed) and apply for a CBP-One appointment, at which their prior illegal entry will not be held against them. The House Committee detailed how:

DHS has given tens of thousands of aliens the option to leave the United States through “voluntary return,” which carries no immigration consequences. In fact, at a May 2023 press conference, Secretary Mayorkas boasted about DHS’s soft-on-illegal-entry approach: We are giving the option to individuals, who are in our custody, the option of voluntarily returning to the country from which they came. Because of the consequence of a removal, people have to understand that under Title 8 of the United States Code, when one is removed, one faces at least a five-year bar to reentry. And so, we will give people an opportunity to avoid that tougher consequence by voluntarily returning.

In the first 10 months of fiscal year 2023, there were 75,575 voluntary returns at the southwest border, 23,105 more than the previous eight fiscal years combined. Because aliens do not face immigration consequences through voluntary return, they have myriad opportunities to re-attempt their illegal entries.

As the Florida v. United States court found,

Collectively, these actions were akin to posting a flashing “Come In, We’re Open” sign on the southern border.... The Court uses this analogy not only because it is a fair characterization of what Defendants did but also because Defendants elicited testimony and argued at trial that they could not simply hang a “Closed” sign on the border. Moreover, although Defendants’ argument that they could not simply “close” the border to arriving aliens may be technically accurate, it is somewhat disingenuous because 8 U.S.C. §1182(f) specifically authorizes the President to “suspend the entry of all aliens” whenever he finds that their entry would be “detrimental to the interests of the United States.”

That statute “exudes deference,” Hawaii, 138 S. Ct. at 2408, and if it is broad enough to authorize the President to “establish a naval blockade that would ... deny illegal Haitian migrants the ability to disembark on our shores,” Sale v. Haitian Ctrs. Council, Inc., 509 U.S. 155, 187 (1993), it would certainly seem to authorize the President to close the border to arriving aliens once it became apparent that CBP and ICE facilities were not going to be able to handle the “surge” of aliens coming to the border.

CONCLUSIONS

Those who cross illegally, and those who encourage and enable them to do so, make their very first act on U.S. soil the commission of a crime. Yet federal penalties for these offenses remain rare compared to the frequency of their commission. Even an adverse immigration court determination does not provide consequences; an ERO official acknowledged that with the current rate of removals, ICE would need 20 years to remove the aliens currently on the non-detained docket who have a final order of removal. What results is a system choked with bureaucratic inertia, almost as if by design, and a human tragedy of massive proportions.

Absent the overheated rhetoric from all political angles, the situation truly is not complicated; individuals from other countries are enticed to come to this country, the overwhelming majority with no plausible claim to asylum whatsoever, and serious harm results on both sides of our border as the situation is exploited for crime and profit by cartels, funding by NGOs, and political clout-chasing by others. All the while, we and our fellow taxpayers pick up the tab.

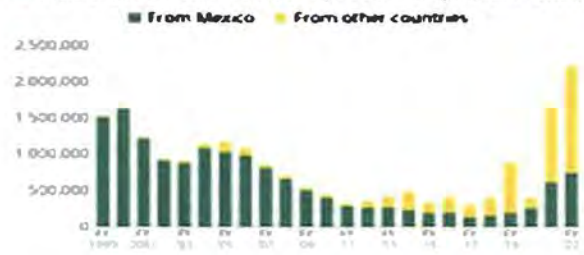

These are the policies.

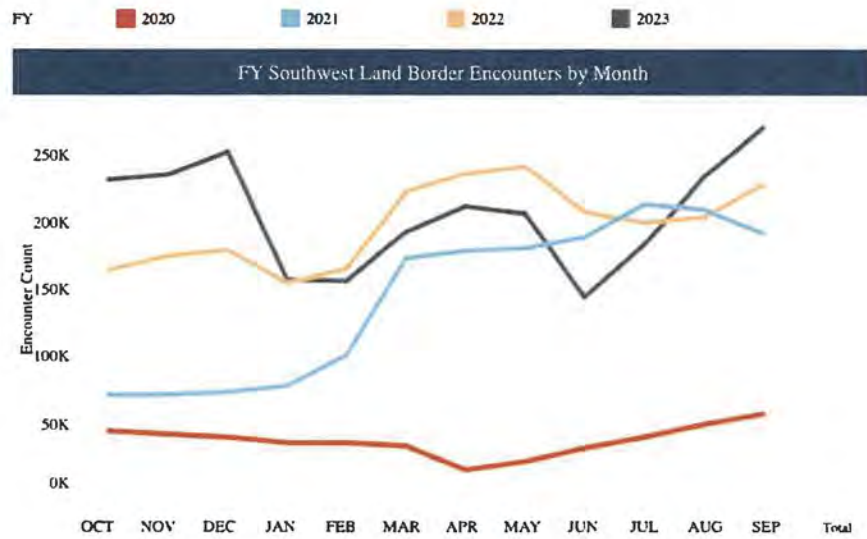

And these are their effects.

III. HOW MANY

Former Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security (under President Obama), Jeh Johnson, famously said:

I know that one thousand [apprehensions] a day overwhelms the system. I cannot begin to imagine what four thousand looks like, so we are truly in a crisis.

If 1,000 is overwhelming, and 4,000 is a crisis, more than 8,000 a day is nothing short of invasive.

We have been meeting for the entire period of Fiscal Year 2022 (October, 2022 - September, 2023). During the time we have been convening, more than 3 million aliens are known to have attempted to cross our borders. Approximately one third (around one million) were refused entry; more than 900,000 individuals were released into the country to await court hearings; some 700,000 crossed illegally but “got away” from law enforcement into the country; 140,000 were Unaccompanied Alien Children (most of whom are age 15 and above) released into the country; and more than 400,000 were either flown in directly or transported across the border specifically to avoid having to be tabulated as “border encounters” via use of “CBP-One” or other parole programs, some of which have been declared illegal when challenged in federal court by states, including the State of Florida.¹⁴ Finally, there are the “Unknown Gotaways,” those who penetrate one of the many and vast swaths of unprotected borderlands or coastlines without being seen, reported or recorded, or are successfully smuggled in; no figure exists for them, of course, though it seems to us safe to presume the number is at least equal to the “known” cohort (nearly 700,000).¹⁵

¹⁴Per the federal court in Florida v. United States, “Defendants have effectively turned the Southwest Border into a meaningless line in the sand and little more than a speedbump for aliens flooding into the country by prioritizing ‘alternatives to detention’ over actual detention and by releasing more than a million aliens into the country—on ‘parole’ or pursuant to the exercise of ‘prosecutorial discretion’ under a wholly inapplicable statute—without even initiating removal proceedings. The evidence further establishes that Florida is harmed by the challenged policies because well over 100,000 aliens have been released into Florida under the policies[.]”

¹⁵ According to the U.S. Geological Survey (USGS), the length of the International Boundary line of the U.S.-Canadian border, excluding Alaska (which is 1,538 miles by itself), is approximately 3,987 miles, while the length of the U.S.-Mexican border is estimated at 1,933 miles. Thirteen U.S. states share international boundaries with Canada and four share an international border with

This is a number roughly equivalent to the population of children born in the country; 3.67 million Americans were born during the matching 12-month period, according to the Census Bureau, and that includes at least 400,000 American citizens born to illegal aliens.

Encounters of illegal aliens on the southwest border have surpassed 100,000 for 31 straight months (in fact being nearly triple that in the record-setting month of September alone). Indeed, those entering the country illegally this year substantially outnumbered those crossing according to our laws. For the month of September 2023, of the 270,000 aliens encountered at the southern border, nearly 220,000 of those were between ports of entry—i.e., illegal, and illegal entries for the year as a whole were double those who properly presented at a port of entry. This does not include more than a million individuals annually who overstay their visas (again, rendering their presence illegal). If they are added to the inflow, two aliens are illegally present in the country for every newborn American.

The inflow included 52,000 Chinese and 93,000 Indians, 51,000 Filipinos, 19,000 Turks, and 292,000 people from countries such as Angola, Cameroon, and the Congo; 163,000 Haitians, 196,000 Cubans, 103,000 people from Ecuador, and 386,000 Mexicans. The population included 1.55 million single men, plus 927,000 women and children in family groups.

More than eight million aliens have crossed the borders of the United States since January 2021, the majority illegally. This is a population greater than that of thirty-eight states. We also have seen and heard multiple reports from eyewitnesses and media of the “border litter” so prevalent; various forms of consulate documents, certificates, licenses, and all manner of identification from different countries, along with printed CBP-One appointment slips, are found by the gross along the border regions, between ports of entry. The reasons people crossing would abandon such things do not require much speculation, at least not from the experts and Border Patrol personnel we heard from: some do not want to wait, and do not want to be discovered for who they actually are.

Yet at the same time, we heard from witnesses who came to the country legally, followed the prescribed process, and became citizens. One in particular we learned was not given a copy of her naturalization certificate at her swearing-in ceremony; the Court pronounced her to be a citizen, yet she did not receive one particular document from agents stationed there. She married, had children, bought a business, and owns a home. When she needed the missing document to return to her home country to visit her sick mother, DHS was unable to provide her with a copy because the backlog of cases created by these policies was so extensive. We commend our law enforcement partners for stepping in to assist her; many months and thousands of dollars later, she reported she was finally given the document. We cannot help but view this incident as a microcosm of the priorities expressed by the current policies-- grossly unfair to those who try to follow our laws, and favoring those who flout them.

Mexico. The “general coastline” of our 50 states totals 12,383 miles, while detailed coastal maps including such things as coves and inlets come to 88,612 miles (not including the Great Lakes). There are many gaps from which to choose.

INCOMING BUT NOT OUTGOING

Border Patrol was ordered to release over 900,000 aliens into the U.S. in fiscal year 2023 after they were apprehended crossing illegally, including 155,821 releases in September alone. These numbers do not include ICE or ports of entry releases. The border release numbers also do not include approximately 140,000 Unaccompanied Alien Children, or the 238,870 illegal aliens transferred directly to ICE custody.

For context, 900,000 is a population size larger than several US states, including Wyoming, Vermont, Alaska, North Dakota, and South Dakota. The releases include both Notices to Appear¹⁶ and paroles. Between May and September 2023, just 300,000 aliens were removed or deported—fewer than entered in the month of September alone.

The reason for delay in removal includes some sobering statistics relating to our immigration courts, from TRAC:

- The 659 Judges on the Immigration Courts recorded in FY 2023 receiving 1,488,110 new cases. This compares with 669,011 cases that the court completed during this period.
- At the end of September 2023, there were more than two million active cases pending before the Immigration Courts.

¹⁶ Accurately referred to in a Congressional report as a “Notice to [Dis]appear.”

- Miami-Dade County, FL, has the most residents with pending Immigration Court deportation cases (120,271).
- ICE Alternatives to Detention (ATD) programs are currently monitoring 194,632 families and single individuals, 15,000 of them in Miami.

We are aware that one of the apparent proposed solutions to the court backlog is to stop letting only judges handle the claims and instead permit “Asylum Officers”--bureaucrats-- to do so. According to NBC News earlier this year:

The administration is issuing a new rule Thursday that will allow asylum officers, rather than just immigration court judges, to adjudicate the claims of immigrants seeking asylum...

Under the new rule, if an asylum officer grants protections to an immigrant, the immigrant can remain in the U.S. and bypass immigration courts.... If an asylum officer decides an immigrant is not eligible for asylum, the case will go to an immigration judge.

Particularly in light of the repeated failure of similar bureaucrats to adequately vet sponsors in HHS' UAC program—some of whom are these very same illegal border crossers—as documented extensively in our Third and Fourth Presentments, this proposal offers no solace whatsoever. Several states have filed a challenge to the rule in federal court.

This rule allows asylum officers to grant asylum (a path to citizenship) with only a “nonadversarial hearing” where the alien may have an attorney but no one will represent the United States, unlike actual Immigration Court. Decisions allowing asylum cannot be appealed by the United States; decisions averse to the alien simply land him back in front of a judge (minimizing any true backlog reduction). And “asylum officers” have granted asylum in more than 30 percent of the cases, about twice as often as immigration judges.

What is more, many of those who should not even reach the “asylum hearing” stage at all are likewise not removed. A Congressional report disclosed that:

Under the Immigration and Nationality Act, certain aliens encountered at the border are subject to expedited removal, in which they are ordered removed from the United States without further review or hearing.

The prohibition on further review, however, does not apply to any alien who indicates an intention to apply for asylum or otherwise expresses a fear of persecution. In those cases, an asylum officer must conduct a credible fear interview to determine whether “there is a significant possibility” that the alien could establish eligibility for asylum.

If an alien fails to show a credible fear, the alien should be removed pursuant to the expedited removal process... [yet] of the more than 2.1 million illegal aliens released by DHS from January 20, 2021, through March 31, 2023, only 197,531 illegal aliens [approximately 10%] were placed in expedited removal and claimed a fear of persecution, with upward of 2 million aliens being released or placed directly in removal proceedings without first having established that they even feared persecution.

Additionally, between January 20, 2021, and March 31, 2023, 25 percent of aliens placed into expedited removal did not claim a fear of persecution. DHS reported no “confirmed removal or return” for nearly 20,000 of those illegal aliens who did not even claim a fear[.]

The Courts and Border Patrol are not the only agencies removing fewer illegal aliens. Another policy (the “Mayorkas Memo”) mandates that the mere fact that aliens are removable “should not alone be the basis of an enforcement action against them.” ICE officers also have to divert time they could spend apprehending criminals to processing the (less than 50% of) “parolees” showing up at their offices for “Notice to Appear” appointments. Yet even when denied asylum, these individuals are not removed.

Congress found that DHS released at least 2.1 million illegal aliens into the United States but only removed 108,102 of those aliens from the country. Between January 20, 2021, and March 31, 2023, the government has removed from the United States only 5,993 illegal aliens who were encountered at the southwest border and who were placed in removal proceedings before an immigration judge during that time. In other words, of the at least 2.1 million aliens released into the United States during that time, 99.7% of the illegal aliens have yet to be removed. Congress also noted that of asylum seekers released into the United States from January 20, 2021, through March 31, 2023, only six percent were screened for a claimed fear of persecution.

ICE agents are now prohibited from relying solely on the fact of an alien’s felony conviction to remove him or her, regardless of the seriousness of the underlying crime. Testimony and evidence have shown that ICE arrests of aliens who are convicted of crimes while in our country have dropped 65% according to comparisons between ICE arrest figures in 2018 and 2022:

Criminal Convictions	105,140	to	36,322
Pending Criminal Charges	32,977	to	10,074
Removals from USA	95,360	to	28,204

We learned that there are over 400,000 convicted criminals on ICE’s “non-detained docket,” meaning they are not in custody while awaiting their immigration court hearing. In 2020, the 93,000 criminal aliens arrested by ERO with criminal histories accounted for 374,000 criminal charges and convictions, about 4 per alien. In 2022, the 46,000 aliens arrested with criminal histories accounted for nearly 200,000 convictions and charges; as one expert noted, had this policy not changed, there would have been another 90,000 aliens arrested who collectively have approximately another 300,000 convictions and charges.

To compound these issues, TRAC found that due to being absolutely overwhelmed, as of the end of September 2022, Immigration Court judges dismissed a total of 63,586 cases because Department of Homeland Security officials, chiefly Border Patrol agents, are not filing the actual “Notice to Appear” (NTA) with the Immigration Court. Without a filed NTA, the case cannot proceed. This means that one out of every six Court cases were thrown out for this reason this past fiscal year.

Where NTA’s are filed, one congressman learned that New York City’s ICE office was giving aliens notices to appear for court in 2033.

ICE DETAINERS & MIAMI-DADE COUNTY: THROUGH THE LOOKING GLASS

A routine part of federal immigration enforcement is the issuance of detainer notices by U.S Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE). These notices are lodged for noncitizens who have been arrested on criminal charges and who ICE has probable cause to believe are illegally present in the United States. The detainer asks state and local law enforcement agencies to notify ICE before a removable alien is released from their custody and to maintain custody of the alien for a brief period of time (usually no longer than 48 hours) so that ICE can take custody of said alien upon release from that agency’s custody.

The issuance and compliance with these detainer notices are a critical component of the federal government’s obligation to enforce our immigration laws and to ensure public safety. So much so, that ICE’s own website acknowledges that “[w]hen law enforcement agencies fail to honor immigration detainers and release serious criminal offenders onto the streets, it undermines ICE’s ability to protect public safety and carry out its mission.” It is undeniable that the failure to honor ICE detainer notices allows criminal aliens to evade removal proceedings.

As part of our mandate, we investigated county compliance with Florida Statutes § 908.104 requiring local cooperation with federal immigration authorities. The statute also provides a limited avenue by which local state agencies can ignore and effectively “lift” an ICE detainer. Specifically, Florida Statutes § 908.104(5) allows the lifting of ICE holds for noncitizens who have been cooperating victims or witnesses of a crime, while Florida Statutes § 908.104(8) allows for the lifting of ICE holds for unlawfully present aliens who are a witness or victim of certain enumerated crimes without requiring any proof of cooperation with law enforcement.

During our third session, we heard testimony and received exhibits detailing a process used by inmates in the Miami-Dade County jail to request relief under these two statutory exemptions. Disturbingly, we discovered that this process was being abused and requests to set aside ICE detainers were being granted contrary to the plain meaning of the statute and the intent of the legislature. This “process” was brokered between Miami-Dade County and the local Public Defender’s Office by several immigration activist groups that had sued Miami-Dade County for complying with Florida law and cooperating with federal immigration authorities.

The agreement allowed the submission of unsworn notices indicating that a statement “existed” where the jail inmate claimed that they were a “victim” of a qualifying offense under Florida Statutes § 908.104(8). These “statements” were not challenged by anyone and the county jail did not receive any documentation corroborating these claims. Thus, unproven and dubious claims of victimhood by criminal aliens were submitted and approved allowing Miami-Dade County to disregard and lift ICE holds. Adding insult to injury, every time federal immigration officers reached out to Miami-Dade County and expressed concern over this process, they were met with platitudes and promises of follow-ups that rarely materialized, accomplishing nothing. Our review of subpoenaed records and emails revealed that when federal immigration officials asked the straightforward question of what standard of “evidence” the county used in evaluating these detainer exemption notices, county officials admitted among themselves that they had no way to verify the claims. Yet, this runaway and ill-conceived program soldiered on.

More troubling still was the fact that unsworn exemption notices were being submitted for defendants who not only failed to report being the victim of any crime, but also for crimes that occurred either decades ago or outside of the United States. One defendant claimed to be the victim of a “battery” that allegedly occurred over thirty years ago. These safety valve exemptions were created in the first place to assist local authorities prosecute criminals. Common sense dictates that a “crime” allegedly to have occurred years ago, outside of the United States, and which was not reported to authorities would be insufficient to exempt a defendant from ICE detention. Sadly, common sense seemed to be in short-supply in Miami-Dade County as it pertained to these exemption notices.

We would also want to point out the problems with the statute listing battery as an enumerated offense that would qualify a noncitizen for relief under Florida Statutes § 908.104(8). In Florida, battery is any physical touch without a person's consent. Under that analysis, a criminal alien arrested for a serious felony offense can seek relief by claiming to be a victim of a simple slap or unwanted pat on the back. Suppose two jail inmates strike up a conversation and decide that each would poke the other. Each defendant would then be able to claim relief as a "victim" of a battery. It doesn't take much time to see the abuses that can ensue.

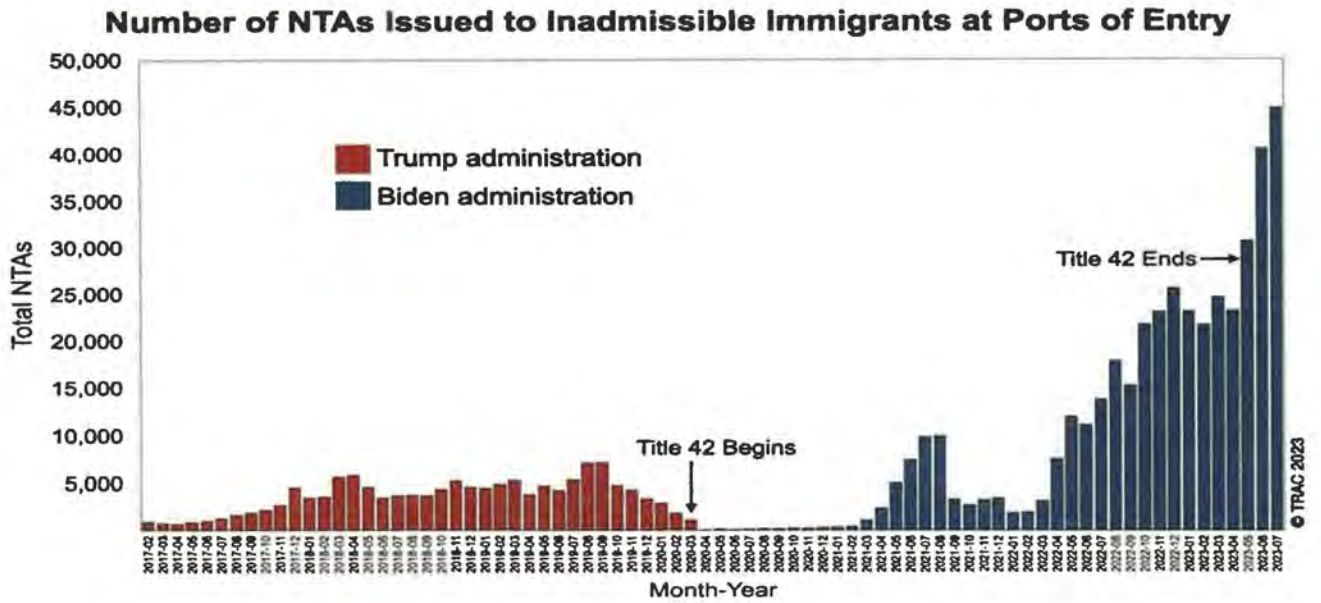

Additionally, all the notices we reviewed claimed relief under Florida Statutes § 908.104(8) rather than Florida Statutes § 908.104(5) which requires evidence of cooperation. The consequence has been that criminal illegal aliens arrested for serious felony offenses, such as sexual battery on a minor, armed carjacking, and aggravated battery have been able to secure release from custody despite ICE requesting a hold for deportation proceedings. In one instance, the county jail lifted the detainer notice for a defendant who claimed to be the victim of the very crime for which he had been arrested. Even if the county did not want to implement a rigorous process commiserate with claims from detained criminal aliens seeking relief from ICE holds, a cursory search of pertinent court dockets would have revealed this duplicity. However, it seems that the process employed by Miami-Dade County can be charitably described as willful blindness.

Some of the exemption notices we reviewed asked the county jail to lift ICE holds for lawfully present aliens even though Florida Statutes § 908.104(8) only applies to unlawfully present aliens. For example, one detained criminal alien sought relief claiming to be the victim of domestic battery. The defendant had entered the United States legally before her arrest. Luckily, the county listened to the objections raised by federal immigration agents and denied relief due to her legal status. However, that is not the end of the story. As it turned out, the defendant was arrested for extortion, falsely reporting a crime, and other related charges after admitting to police that she would enter into consensual relationships with men and then extort them by raising the threat of reporting sexual assault. So, in effect, the defendant was claiming to be the victim of the very lies she peddled for financial gain.

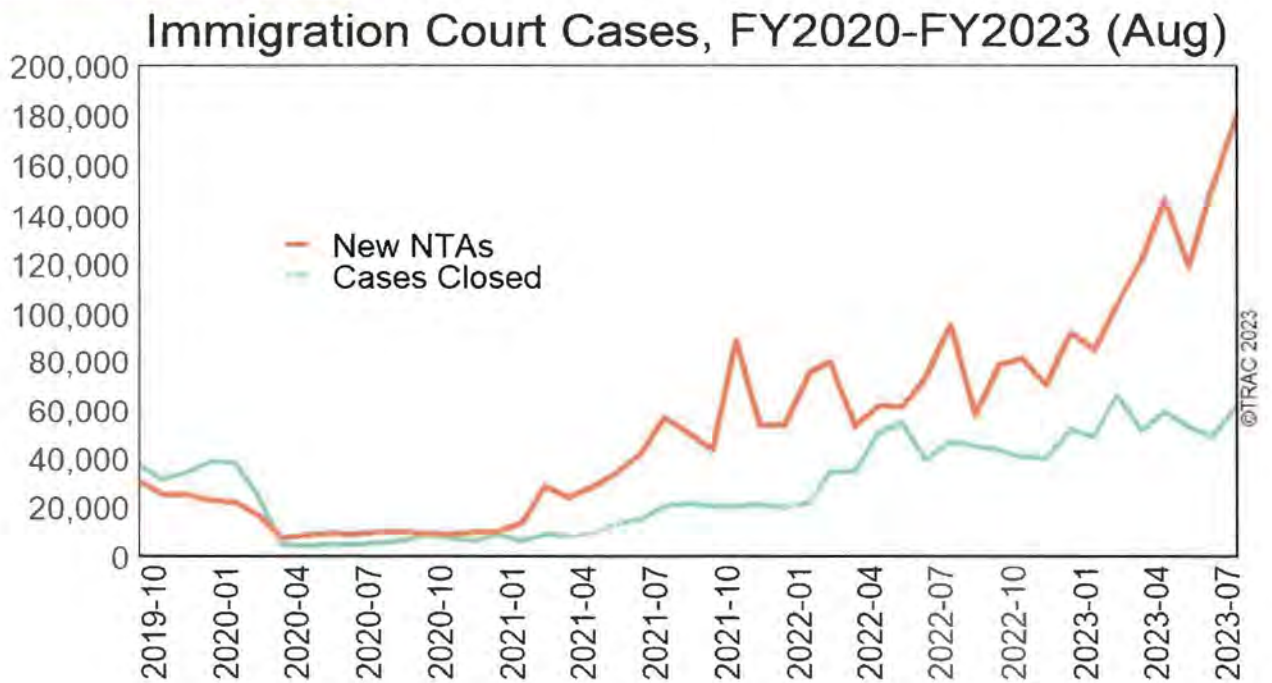

We have learned first-hand that ICE detainers can be the difference between life and death. In 2008, a Cuban national was sentenced to 10 years in prison for Attempted Felony Murder and Armed Robbery with a Deadly Weapon. One would expect that upon the completion of the defendant's prison sentence, he would be prioritized by ICE for immediate deportation. Instead, the defendant was released from prison in 2017 and federal immigration authorities simply "monitored" his whereabouts even when the United States had resumed deportation flights to Cuba. One wonders how federal immigration authorities define "enforcement priorities" if it does not include a violent criminal alien who spent a decade in state prison for attempted murder. Tragically, during the early morning hours of March 24, 2019, the defendant shot in cold blood an unsuspecting acquaintance at the top of a parking garage. Words cannot describe the brutality of what we saw as we watched the video surveillance of this heinous crime. If ICE had requested the state prison to hold this murderer for removal proceedings then his eventual victim would still be alive.

Thankfully and because of our investigation and Second Presentment Report, Miami-Dade County put a halt to this problematic ICE detainer exemption process. Jail inmates seeking relief now have to provide actual evidence to corroborate their claims and certain inmates are ineligible due to their crime of arrest. This is a good start, but more must be done to prevent this kind of abuse from reoccurring. To that end, we strongly urge the legislature to delete Florida Statutes § 908.104(8) in its entirety and Florida Statutes § 908.104(5) must be limited to crimes occurring in the United States and time barred to five years prior to an alien's claim of relief under the statute. Additionally, the Florida Legislature must bar an alien with pending criminal charges for any crime or attempt to commit any crime of violence, felony drug offense involving the sale, manufacturing, distribution, or trafficking in a controlled substance, or felony sexual offense from being eligible for relief under the statute.

These are the policies.

And these are their effects.

VISA OVERSTAYS AND LOOPHOLES

According to DHS's "Fiscal Year 2022 Entry/Exit Overstay Report":

An overstay is a nonimmigrant who was lawfully admitted to the United States for an authorized period but stayed in the United States beyond their authorized admission period.

At the end of FY 2022, there were 795,167 Suspected In-Country Overstays, which represents 3.42 percent of expected departures[.]

Fiscal Year 2022's visa overstay rate was more than double the rate of recent years. Lest any reader think that such illegal acts amount only to "technical" crimes posing no threat, last month CNN reported that:

Sohaib Abuayyash, 20, who is in the United States on an expired nonimmigrant visa, made "statements to others that support the killing of individuals of particular religious faiths," and "referenced an event in Houston for members of a particular religious group," according to a federal court judge who ordered the man be detained pending trial.

The FBI began investigating Abuayyash in August after agents conducting "open-source research" saw video of him firing multiple firearms, including AR-style rifles, on social media, according to a redacted probable cause affidavit filed on October 19 in the US District Court for the Southern District of Texas.

Abuayyash applied for asylum in the US after his nonimmigrant visa expired in 2019, according to the affidavit. He's authorized to work in the US until August 2025, and is not allowed to "possess or use firearms or ammunition," it states. The affidavit also says Abuayyash "has been in direct contact with others who share a radical mindset, has been conducting physical training, and has trained with weapons to possibly commit an attack."

But in an order of detention pending trial document filed on October 24, US Magistrate Judge Christina A. Bryan wrote that Abuayyash "has viewed specific and detailed content posted by radical organizations on the internet including lessons on how to construct bombs or explosive devices; and that Defendant has made statements to others that support the killing of individuals of particular religious faiths. In his communications with another individual about martyrdom, the Defendant referenced an event in Houston for members of a particular religious group,” the judge said. Abuayyash was “plotting to attack a Jewish gathering,” a law enforcement source told CNN.

We also learned of what appears to be a more recently-developed scheme to take advantage of a loophole in one of our state statutes: the “Special Immigrant Juvenile Visa.” The SIJ visa enables aliens who entered as unaccompanied minors to obtain orders of protection from state family courts based on a claim of abuse, neglect or abandonment by one parent. This order of protection offers a “green card” path to citizenship for, as one Congressional witness put it, “tens of thousands of UACs now in the pipeline, many of whom would otherwise be ineligible due to a criminal history, gang involvement, immigration fraud, or simple inability to qualify under the legal immigration system created by Congress.”

In Florida, a Special Immigrant Juvenile Visa is available to a person who has been declared dependent by a juvenile court, who was deemed eligible for long term foster care, and for whom it has been determined that it would not be in their best interest to return to their parents' previous country of nationality or country of last habitual residence, according to Florida Statutes 39.01.

Ordinarily, petitions for a court to make this finding must be filed by the Department of Children and Families. However, more recently there have been a number of cases wherein UACs have had attorneys file them on behalf of the UAC. These petitions seek no services for the child, and do NOT, under any circumstances, want the Department of Children and Families to become involved in supervision or rendering of services (as would ordinarily happen in family court). This makes the process ripe for abuse by gang members (MS-13 membership of many UAC has been well-documented in our Third and Fourth Presentments), “minors” who are not really minors at all but have fooled ORR (we recounted multiple instances of this as well), or those with a criminal record-- none of whom would ever otherwise qualify for a permanent resident / green card--, as well as “sponsors” who coerce UAC into filing the petition so the “sponsor” can further exploit them.

Florida law has a great deal of control over this federal process, unlike many other areas, because SIJ status requires a state-court determination of dependency first. As our Supreme Court wrote in one recent case:

B.R.C.M., an unaccompanied minor from Guatemala, illegally entered the United States at age thirteen and was released by the Office of Refugee Resettlement to his godmother as a sponsor. After his arrival, a private petition was filed on behalf of B.R.C.M. alleging three grounds for adjudication of dependency under section 39.01(15), Florida Statutes which defines a dependent child as a child who is found by the court: “(a) [t]o have been abandoned, abused, or neglected by the child's parent or parents or legal custodians”; “(e) [t]o have no parent or legal custodians capable of providing supervision and care”; or “(f) [t]o be at substantial risk of imminent abuse, abandonment, or neglect by the parent or parents or legal custodians.”

In support of a determination of dependency, the petition asserted that B.R.C.M.'s father abandoned him at birth and never provided him with food, shelter, clothing, and medical care. The petition asserted that B.R.C.M.'s mother abandoned him [in Guatemala] at age four when she disappeared and never contacted him again or provided him with basic necessities. B.R.C.M. then went to live with his grandmother until she was no longer able to care for him because of old age and illness. At age thirteen, fearing he would be forced to join a local gang and having no family to care for him, B.R.C.M. fled Guatemala, travelled through Mexico, and entered the United States in Hidalgo, Texas.

The petition asserted that B.R.C.M. was placed with his godmother in Miami, Florida, and met his father for the first time after his arrival in the United States. His father has maintained telephone contact with B.R.C.M., but has not provided for the child's basic needs. [there was no allegation that the godmother (his ORR sponsor) was abandoning, abusing, or neglecting him.]. The petition was denied after an eight-minute hearing in the circuit court, during which the court made no factual findings.

On appeal, the Third District repeatedly observed that the child's sole purpose in filing the dependency petition was to facilitate an application for Special Immigrant Juvenile Status (SIJS) and seek lawful permanent residency. In re B.R.C.M., 182 So.3d at 751. The district court determined it was “plain on the face of the petition that B.R.C.M. is not ‘truly’ abandoned, abused or neglected within the meaning of Chapter 39...: “The purpose of the dependency laws of this state is to protect and serve children and families in need, not those with a different agenda.”

Our Supreme Court then ruled that, because Florida’s statute does not actually address this obvious gamesmanship, the courts were without power to deny such petitions:

[W]hen a Florida court is presented with a dependency petition, the court's concern should be whether the allegations made in support of an adjudication of dependency satisfy Florida's statutory grounds for such an adjudication, not whether the [juvenile] hopes to obtain [SIJS].” ... “[I]f a child qualifies for a declaration of dependency under our statutes, the child's motivation to obtain legal residency ... is irrelevant.”

If a child meets the statutory criteria for dependency, the child must be adjudicated accordingly, regardless of the child's motivations for seeking a dependency adjudication.

B.R.C.M. v. Florida Dep't of Children & Families, 42 Fla. L. Weekly S472 (Fla. Apr. 20, 2017).

We reiterate here our recommendation from our Third and Fourth Presentments: require any “sponsor” who is not a biological parent or court-ordered legal guardian to submit themselves and the UAC to the family court for such a formal legal determination; failure to do so should be a felony.

Further, we ask our leaders to immediately close this visa loophole by requiring petitions under Chapter 39.01 to either (a) be filed by the Department of Children and Families or (b) require that any minor being deemed dependent be formally placed in custody of the Department.

WHERE TO

In December of 2022, we reviewed a study which disclosed that following geofencing of NGO facilities on both sides of the Southern border during the month of January 2022, more than 30,000 unique mobile devices were detected at these NGO facilities. The devices were later traced to 431 separate U.S. congressional districts out of a total 435 congressional districts, including a great number in Florida.

On September 6, 2023, the DHS Office of the Inspector General (OIG) published a report, “DHS Does Not Have Assurance That All Migrants Can be Located Once Released into the United States.” According to that report, “U.S. Border Patrol cannot always obtain and does not always record migrant addresses, and [ICE] does not always validate migrant addresses prior to migrant release into the United States.” We have quoted it before:

80 percent (790,090 of 981,671) of addresses were recorded at least twice during an 18-month period, some of which were provided by families upon release. More than 780 of these addresses were used more than 20 times.... ICE FACILTITIES DHS released 7 families, comprising 12 adults and 17 children, to a single-family 3-bedroom New Jersey home in a 70-day period. Additionally, the OIG found seven addresses that were used more than 500 times each... ICE must be able to locate migrants to enforce immigration laws, including to arrest or remove individuals who are considered potential threats to national security. The notable percentage of missing, invalid for delivery, or duplicate addresses on file means DHS may not be able to locate migrants following their release into the United States... [w]hen migrants do not check in, ICE . . . cannot easily locate migrants who may be threats to public safety or are scheduled for removal.

The addresses used included restaurants in New York, bus stations in New Jersey, Illinois, and Georgia, and a DHS Office in Illinois.

Moreover, as the Florida v. United States court found, as of April 26, 2022, there had been over 226,000 aliens released under “prosecutorial discretion” under the “Notice to Report” and “Parole+ATD policies.” More than 110,000 of those aliens had not been issued NTAs and more than 66,000 were outside the period that they were supposed to have reported to ICE to be issued an NTA. We cannot help but wonder where they might be now; to our knowledge, no agency has followed up to investigate their whereabouts.

According to one ICE ERO officer,

[o]fficers spend their days reviewing migrant cases at their desks and do not feel they are exercising law enforcement authority, for which they were hired and, without a valid address to locate migrants, ICE may only locate migrants after they have been arrested by state or local police for unrelated offenses post-release. Only after the migrant’s arrest would ICE be aware of the migrant’s whereabouts.

By all accounts, more than one million illegally present aliens reside in our State. Florida ranks fourth among the states in most nationwide estimates of number of such individuals; Miami is fifth among metropolitan areas.

Those numbers are not decreasing. As previously referenced, more than 2,400 aliens (not including UAC) have been shipped by the federal government to just two sections of Florida in the past week; at that rate, more than 120,000 will have joined our population this calendar year. The Florida v. United States court likewise reported that:

DHS provided information in discovery estimating that about 160,000 of the aliens released into the country between January 2021 and July 2022 provided a Florida address or are on the Miami ERO docket, which covers Florida, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands. That number does not account for aliens released after July 2022.

FORESEEABLE EFFECTS

Some lessons, however traumatic when initially taught, for some reason apparently need to be re-learned:

It is elemental to border security to know who is coming into the country.

Today more than 9 million people are in the United States outside the legal immigration system. We must also be able to monitor and respond to entrances between our ports of entry, working with Canada and Mexico as much as possible. There is a growing role for state and local law enforcement agencies. They need more training and work with federal agencies so that they can cooperate more effectively with those federal authorities in identifying terrorist suspects. All but one of the 9/11 hijackers acquired some form of U.S. identification document, some by fraud. Acquisition of these forms of identification would have assisted them in boarding commercial flights, renting cars, and other necessary activities.

Fraud in identification documents is no longer just a problem of theft. At many entry points to vulnerable facilities, including gates for boarding aircraft, sources of identification are the last opportunity to ensure that people are who they say they are and to check whether they are terrorists.

The 9/11 commission report¹⁷, National Commission on Terrorist Attacks, page 361 (2004). https://govinfo.library.unt.edu/911/report/911Report_Ch12.pdf

We have seen the repeated assurances that all these incoming aliens are “vetted” and screened prior to being released for possible court proceedings. Some simple figures associated with this total render us exceedingly skeptical of these claims. One year consists of 31,536,000 seconds. Assuming for the moment that Customs and Border Patrol officers are working around-the-clock every day, each of the 3.2 million aspiring entrants averages less than 10 seconds to have their entire history checked, background explored, biometrics examined and interview accomplished (let alone enhanced SIA vetting requirements).

¹⁷ It is no small irony that the Department of Homeland Security owes its very existence to the recommendations of the 9/11 Commission Report, yet now enacts policies which ignore and directly contravene the actual recommendations the Report contains.

At that rate, even if 500 officers were working at the same time doing nothing but processing these aliens,¹⁸ barely an hour could be devoted to each. The House Committee on Homeland Security heard testimony that:

¹⁸ They most certainly do not have such a luxury of focus. According to its own publication, “On a Typical Day in Fiscal Year 2022,” CBP...

- Processed:
 - 868,867 passengers and pedestrians:
 - 263,000 incoming international air passengers and crew
 - 58,549 passengers and crew on arriving ship/boat
 - 547,318 incoming land travelers
 - 91,605 truck, rail, and sea containers
 - 226,589 incoming privately owned vehicles
 - $9.2 billion worth of imported products
 - 107,000 entries of merchandise at our air, land, and seaports of entry
 - $306 million in duties, taxes, and other fees, including more than $287 million in duties
- Conducted:
 - 6,068 enforcement encounters nationwide between the ports of entry (including apprehensions and expulsions)
 - 41 arrests of wanted criminals at U.S. ports of entry
 - 1,152 enforcement encounters nationwide at ports of entry (including inadmissible migrants and expulsions)
- Discovered:
 - 240 pests at U.S. ports of entry and 2,677 materials for quarantine: plant, meat, animal byproduct, and soil
- Seized:
 - 2,895 pounds of drugs
 - $217,700 illicit currency
 - $8 million worth of products with Intellectual Property Rights violations
- Intercepted:
 - 8 fraudulent documents
- Employed:
 - 63,843 men and women including:
 - 25,836 CBP officers
 - 2,668 CBP Agriculture Specialists
 - 19,357 Border Patrol agents
 - 569 Air interdiction agents (pilots)
 - 364 Marine interdiction agents
 - 363 Aviation enforcement agents
 - 1,104 Trade personnel
- Deployed:
 - More than 700 canine teams and 101 horse patrols

At the end of FY 2020 (the last year for which staffing statistics are available), there were fewer than 17,000 Border Patrol agents stationed along the 1,954-mile Southwest border.

On paper, that equals out to roughly 8.64 agents per mile, but in reality, agents work shifts of approximately 50 hours per week. That means fewer than 30 percent of those agents are on the line at any given time, reducing staffing down to about 2.57 agents per mile.

Even that figure, however, does not adequately represent the actual number of agents who are “on the line”—that is, actively preventing the illicit entry of drug mules and human traffickers and smugglers—at the border at any given time.

Given what we have learned about the lengthy and detailed requirements for accurately vetting an individual from a national security perspective, as well as the expertise and time required to do so meaningfully¹⁹, we are not convinced that anything much beyond a smile and a wave could be accomplished in such an amount of time, and we would not choose to gamble the safety of our fellow citizens on the results.

- Flew:
 - 224 hours enforcement missions over the United States
 - Underway (float):
 - Underway 78 float hours of enforcement missions in the United States
 - Conducted operations in:
 - 22 countries with 33 International Affairs employees working abroad
 - 328 ports of entry within 20 field offices
 - 129 Border Patrol stations within 22 sectors, with 35 permanent checkpoints
 - 75 Air and Marine Operations locations, including branches and units, National Air Security Operations Centers, and the Air and Marine Operations Center

¹⁹ We have also extensively documented (in our Third and Fourth Presentments) the fact that HHS agencies like The Office of Refugee Resettlement consider “vetting” (even of persons attempting to obtain a child from them) to consist of telephone interviews, documents provided via WhatsApp, and studious avoidance of DNA testing or thorough questions about prior criminal history and gang involvement. If that standard prevails across DHS and other companion agencies, there can be zero confidence in the vetting process. We refer again to the announced kindred policies by DHS and the State Department regarding obsessive focus on “streamlining processes” and HHS Secretary Becerra’s description of agency priorities: greater efficiency was demanded because “This is not the way you do an assembly line.”

Nearly 100 Syrian and 50 Iranian nationals have been apprehended by the Border Patrol since the beginning of October 2023; several reporters and Senators recently also disclosed that explosive devices have been located among incoming population flows. These concerns resonate with examination of just four of many cases brought to light during our sessions. In one case,

On April 17, 2022, Border Patrol apprehended a migrant and family members in Yuma, Arizona, and screened them for national security threats. Based on the information it had, FBI's TSC determined the migrant was a possible Terrorist Watchlist match. Border Patrol released the migrant on April 19, 2022. On April 21, 2022, at the Palm Springs International Airport, in Palm Springs, California, the migrant and the migrant's family members checked in for a flight to Tampa, Florida.

During pre-flight screening, the TSC obtained additional information from TSA and confirmed the migrant was a positive Terrorist Watchlist match.

Border agents “were busy processing an increased flow of migrants” at the time, and “as a result, the Tactical Terrorism Response Team did not receive the NTC’s request and did not interview the alien,” instead releasing him to board a commercial flight from Palm Springs, California, to Tampa, Florida. Pre-check routines confirmed the watch list hit. “An increase in apprehensions, which created pressure to quickly process migrants and decreased the time available to review each file” so when the terrorist suspect was flagged a second time prior to boarding the flight to Tampa, the Transportation Security Administration at the Palm Springs airport still let him on the plane.

Once alerted, ICE asked for the “Alien File” from Border Patrol, but didn’t get the file for eight days, because Border Patrol was unable to sort, box, and ship any more than a thousand files “once or twice a week” from its overwhelmed processing center and was tens of thousands behind.

Finally, when ICE did go to make an arrest, it was delayed because Border Patrol’s Alternatives to Detention (electronic monitoring) office didn’t open until 7 a.m. and did not share GPS tracking information with ICE.

Florida is not alone in bearing the brunt of risks from this overburdened system:

On Oct. 3, U.S. Border Patrol encountered the noncitizen [crossing illegally] in the area of Monument Hill near Lukeville, Arizona. Officials processed him and served him a notice to appear as a noncitizen present without admission or parole. The noncitizen was released on his own recognizance and provided with documentation to report to ERO New York City.

On Oct. 10, Homeland Security Investigations agents attached to the FBI's Counter Terrorism Division notified ERO New York City that the noncitizen was wanted in Senegal for terroristic activities.

<https://www.ice.gov/news/releases/ero-new-york-city-arrests-noncitizen-wanted-senegal-terroristic-activities>

And

Enforcement and Removal Operations (ERO) Boston arrested an unlawfully present fugitive convicted of homicide in Venezuela who resided in state-provided housing on Joint Base Cape Cod in Bourne on Oct. 27.

The Venezuelan national, 38, failed to disclose his previous homicide conviction to U.S. Border Patrol officials when they arrested him for unlawfully entering the United States in Eagle Pass, Texas, on July 31. He was processed and given a notice to appear at ICE offices within 60 days, which he failed to do.

When authorities encountered him at his state-provided housing, the Venezuelan citizen admitted that he had been convicted of homicide and was wanted in Venezuela for violation of his sentencing conditions since 2006.

<https://www.ice.gov/news/releases/ero-boston-arrests-fugitive-convicted-homicide-venezuela-joint-base-cape-cod>

Perhaps most urgently, it also came to light that:

one of CBP's field offices found it necessary, in light of current events, to warn agents that individuals inspired by, or reacting to, the current Israel-Hamas-Hezbollah conflict may attempt travel... across the Southwest Border... Foreign fighters motivated by ideology or mercenary soldiers of fortune may attempt to obfuscate travel to or from the US to or from countries in the Middle East through Mexico.

Complicating this fact, though, was a contemporaneous revelation that Palestinians (part of the very population about which CBP issued its warning) are not classified as “Palestinian” when crossing the border; apparently, DHS software does not contain a menu classification for that nationality, meaning that when Palestinians are encountered, they are often documented as “Israeli” even if their passports are stamped by the Palestinian Authority.²⁰

IV. CARTELS AND CO-OPTED SYSTEMS

The evidence we saw and the witnesses we heard from lead us to the conclusion that what occurs at or near the southern border often eventually makes its way to our state, whether by human movement and behavior, livestock or agriculture transport, or financial transactions. To that end we investigated the involvement of Transnational Criminal Organizations (TCOs) and their spheres of influence, as well as the negative implications their activity has for health, safety, security and law enforcement efforts in our state.

Many sections of Mexico have become de facto nation-states, governed not by elected leaders but by well-financed paramilitary groups possessing such equipment as armored vehicles, drone technology, sniper rifles, night vision capability, body armor, shoulder-fired RPGs and heavy machine guns. They have proven capable of taking down at least one Mexican military helicopter. We have seen and heard about armed incursions made by cartel members into American territory. One such group recently had to be physically and militarily evicted from sovereign U.S. soil on Fronton Island in Texas. “Sinaloa,” “CJNG,” “Gulf Cartel,” and “Cartel del Noreste” are currently among the more predominant, though as one group wanes in influence another invariably ascends.

Because of these groups, the U.S. State Department lists the following advisories to anyone considering Mexico as a travel destination:

Country Summary: Violent crime – such as homicide, kidnapping, carjacking, and robbery – is widespread and common in Mexico. The U.S. government has limited ability to provide emergency services to U.S. citizens in many areas of Mexico, as travel by U.S. government employees to certain areas is prohibited or restricted. In many states, local emergency services are limited outside the state capital or major cities.

U.S. citizens are advised to adhere to restrictions on U.S. government employee travel. State-specific restrictions are included in the individual state advisories below. U.S. government employees may not travel between cities after dark, may not hail taxis on the street, and must rely on dispatched vehicles, including app-based services like Uber, and regulated taxi stands. U.S. government employees should avoid traveling alone, especially in remote areas. U.S. government employees may not drive from the U.S.-Mexico border to or from the interior parts of Mexico, except daytime travel within Baja California and between Nogales and Hermosillo on Mexican Federal Highway 15D, and between Nuevo Laredo and Monterrey on Highway 85D.

Do Not Travel To:

Colima state due to crime and kidnapping.

Guerrero state due to crime.

Michoacan state due to crime and kidnapping.

Sinaloa state due to crime and kidnapping

Discussion at a 2021 hearing before the House Subcommittee on Oversight (for DHS) sketched out the reach of TCOs as follows:

TCOs are typically either directly connected to the groups that smuggle migrants across borders or will allow the smugglers to pass through the territory they control for a fee, generating millions of dollars a year from the exploitation of those who seek a better life. For many who hope to escape violence by leaving their homes, the journey can prove just as perilous. It is estimated that approximately 80 percent of women and girls who migrate from the Northern Triangle face sexual violence along the way. Migrants are also highly susceptible to robbery and kidnapping. The same connections that allow TCOs to guarantee passage free from legal hassles, also allow them to victimize migrants with impunity...

Successful TCOs exploit existing logistical chains and financial flows and diversify their portfolios to move multiple illicit items such as drugs, money, counterfeit goods, individuals, and weapons. TCOs conduct their operations without regard for human life and have proven to be highly capable, profitable, powerful, dangerous, elusive, and extremely resilient. In short, TCOs pose a significant threat to both National security and to public safety. Human smugglers—many with ties to TCOs—engage in the crime of unlawfully bringing people into the United States, or unlawfully transporting and harboring people already in the United States, in deliberate evasion of immigration law. It is estimated that TCOs profit anywhere between $200 million and $2.3 billion alone for smuggling migrants from the Northern Triangle to the Southwest Border. Desperate migrants often pay human smuggling groups thousands of dollars to aid them on their journey. These smugglers and TCOs profit by exploiting people who are seeking a better life...

Human smuggling poses a substantial threat to the homeland by creating conduits that allow contraband and persons seeking to harm the United States to clandestinely enter the country. Smugglers control where and how these illegal migrant border crossings take place, putting human lives at risk to create gaps in border security. While agents are diverted to process large groups or to conduct migrant rescues, TCOs are using these diversions to move illicit narcotics or other contraband elsewhere across the border. These same TCOs, through diversified criminal activities, are responsible for the movement of illicit drugs entering the United States....

Transnational gangs from this region represent another threat to our Nation's safety and security. La Mara Salvatrucha, also known as "MS-13," is a gang operating throughout the United States and Northern Triangle countries. Members and associates of MS-13 are expected to protect the name, reputation, and status of the gang from rival gang members and other persons. MS-13 members require that all individuals show respect and deference to the gang and its membership. To accomplish this, MS-13 members and associates are expected to use any means necessary to force respect from those who show disrespect, including acts of intimidation and violence. HSI-led investigations have linked MS-13 gang members to a variety of organized criminal activity, including drug trafficking, extortion, and homicide. Another significant concern for our country, human smuggling, involves the provision of a service—typically transportation, navigation, or fraudulent documents—to facilitate an individual's unauthorized entry into the United States.

Harsh terrains and travel conditions, combined with the potential detection by law enforcement and the threat of violence posed by cartels controlling territory along smuggling routes across Central America and Mexico, make it difficult for migrants to travel from their home countries and reach our borders without the assistance of human smugglers. Criminal organizations play a major role in facilitating the smuggling of these noncitizens from their home countries and across our borders. U.S.-bound human smuggling and related criminal activities are estimated by the Homeland Security Operational Analysis Center to produce revenues of between $2 billion to $6 billion per year.

The Executive Associate Director of HSI testified in June 2021 regarding the “new frontier” of human smuggling by the cartels:

Human smuggling involves the provision of a service—typically transportation, navigation, or fraudulent documents—to facilitate an individual’s unauthorized entry into a foreign country. Over the last five years, nationals of El Salvador, Honduras, and Guatemala (referred to as the Northern Triangle countries), and Mexico, who migrate due to violence, poverty, limited economic opportunity, amongst other reasons, have comprised the majority of undocumented noncitizens encountered without authorization along the Southwest Border...

Criminal organizations step in and to facilitate the illegal smuggling of these noncitizens across our borders.

U.S.-bound human smuggling and related criminal activities are estimated by the Homeland Security Operational Analysis Center to produce revenues of $2 billion to $6 billion per year. Human smuggling organizations profit by charging fees for smuggling undocumented noncitizens into and throughout the United States and by collecting transit fees when smugglers and their clients travel through territory controlled by cartels or other TCOs. These groups are almost exclusively financially driven and see humans as just another commodity to be moved across borders.

Human smuggling enterprises and cartels often maintain a symbiotic relationship, both with cartels controlling the major U.S. and foreign drug markets, while smuggling networks control the smuggling flow, otherwise known as “illicit pathways.” Cartels or other TCOs have traditionally charged a “plaza” or tariff on migrants and human smuggling organizations to transit through their territory or operate in certain border towns. However, since mid-2019, some have taken a more active approach in human smuggling, increasing and diversifying sources of income with an activity they view as low risk.

While human smuggling may constitute the initial crime facilitating the illicit movement of people, including UCs, to our borders, the criminality does not stop there. In some cases, migrants become victims of human or labor trafficking – a crime of exploitation that does not require movement – when criminal networks introduce force, fraud, or coercion into smuggling schemes to induce victims into forced labor or commercial sex. If the victim is under age 18, sex trafficking occurs when the victim is induced to perform commercial sex – force, fraud, or coercion is not required. For example, in May, HSI identified and rescued a victim who was forced into labor after entering the United States. The victim entered the United States as a UC and was subsequently forced to work and live in substandard conditions, with minimal remuneration. HSI’s investigations have also demonstrated that human smuggling often occurs alongside or can be a precursor to other transnational crimes such as gang activity, identity and benefit fraud, money laundering, bulk cash smuggling, narcotics smuggling, arms trafficking, and terrorism and other national security related crime.

DEA’s Washington D.C. Special Agent in Charge wrote in 2021 that:

We see trafficking of illegal drugs and human trafficking often happen together. Transnational drug traffickers and criminal organizations often look to increase profits and market control through diversification. This means using trafficking routes for drugs, labor, sex, and violence. Transporting people (usually women and children) for sex is just another egregious source of profits for these violent criminals.

For traffickers, it doesn’t matter which product is being sold -- both drugs and sex are lucrative industries – as long as money is made. Drug cartels often use trafficked women and children to smuggle drugs across the border, doubling up on the money they can make from them.

Violent criminals like this see no difference between abusing a woman’s body by forcing her to swallow bags of drugs or by forcing her to have sex with hundreds of men.

The link we see between human trafficking and opioids in this area, sadly goes both ways. Human traffickers often use drugs as “bait” to recruit people who have a substance use disorder. Or, conversely, traffickers use drugs as a means of control over their victims – to force compliance, harder work, longer hours, or to keep them “drugged out” so they do not attempt escape. Either way, we see these horrific criminals forcing women and even children into addiction by providing them strong and potent drugs as a means of exerting control.

The Assistant HSI Director followed this up in May 2023:

Evolution of Transnational Criminal Organizations

Criminal organizations in the 21st century do not limit themselves to a single criminal enterprise. These criminal organizations have expanded beyond narcotics smuggling and have morphed into poly-criminal TCOs involved in the associated crimes of weapons trafficking, human trafficking, human smuggling, money laundering, and other crimes....

For example, the illicit collaboration between Chinese TCOs and Mexican cartels have created a complex criminal ecosystem that is fueling money laundering and narcotics trafficking, specifically illicit fentanyl, operations into and within the United States. Chinese money laundering organizations (MLOs) have developed sophisticated networks in the United States, Mexico, China, and throughout Asia to facilitate money laundering schemes. These organizations utilize their vast global infrastructure to clean illicit proceeds for various criminal organizations, including Mexican cartels. Moreover, as Mexican cartels have taken over fentanyl production and operate on an industrial scale, they are procuring precursor chemicals from China and synthesizing these chemicals in Mexico to produce fentanyl. Mexican cartels then smuggle the fentanyl into the United States in either powder or pill form for distribution....

Chinese criminal organizations also facilitate the trafficking and distribution of illicit fentanyl pills. The most common is fake oxycodone pills, which are made to look identical to prescription oxycodone but are laced with deadly fentanyl. These fake pills are responsible for thousands of overdose fatalities, as the user believes they are taking a real oxycodone pill and unknowingly receives a lethal dose of fentanyl. In order to manufacture these pills, Mexican cartels require industrial pill press equipment to turn powdered fentanyl into pill form. The Mexican cartels are purchasing these pill presses directly from Chinese manufacturers who are producing the equipment specifically for illicit activity.

Moreover, TCOs, particularly those along the Southern Border, have employed a multipronged illicit business model encompassing the importation of narcotics into the United States and exportation of illicit firearms and ammunition to Mexico. ...Firearms smuggled from the United States into Mexico allow the TCOs to continue their deadly operations against our Mexican law enforcement partners and the local populace. In 2021, the Government of Mexico estimated at least 342,000 U.S.-sourced firearms are illegally smuggled into Mexico every year. Mexico's National Public Security System reported 34,515 intentional homicides with 70 percent involving firearms in 2020. During this period, the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives (ATF) performed traces on 19,762 firearms recovered in Mexico. ATF checks determined at least 67.7 percent were sourced from the United States with over half traced to a retail purchase.

As for specific cartels and their drug activities (conducted in tandem with portions of the People's Republic of China), the Administrator of DEA testified in May 2023 as follows:

Mexican Cartels and Drug Trafficking

The Sinaloa and Jalisco Cartels pose the greatest criminal drug threat the United States has ever faced. These ruthless, violent, criminal organizations have associates, facilitators, and brokers in all 50 states in the United States, as well as in more than 100 countries around the world. The Sinaloa Cartel, the Jalisco Cartel, and their affiliates control the vast majority of the fentanyl global supply chain, from manufacture to distribution. The cartels are buying precursor chemicals in the PRC; transporting the precursor chemicals from the PRC to Mexico; using the precursor chemicals to mass produce fentanyl; using pill presses to process the fentanyl into fake prescription pills; and using cars, trucks, and other routes to transport the drugs from Mexico into the United States for distribution. It costs the cartels as little as 10 cents to produce a fentanyl-laced fake prescription pill that is sold in the United States for as much as $10 to $30 per pill. As a result, the cartels make billions of dollars from trafficking fentanyl into the United States.

The business model used by the Sinaloa and Jalisco Cartels is to grow at all costs, no matter how many people die in the process. The cartels are engaging in deliberate, calculated treachery to deceive Americans and drive addiction to achieve higher profits.

The Sinaloa Cartel:

The Sinaloa Cartel, based in the Mexican State of Sinaloa, is one of the oldest drug trafficking organizations in Mexico. The Sinaloa Cartel controls drug trafficking activity in various regions in Mexico, particularly along the Pacific Coast. Additionally, it maintains the most expansive international footprint of the Mexican cartels. The Sinaloa Cartel exports and distributes wholesale amounts of fentanyl, methamphetamine, heroin, and cocaine in the United States by maintaining distribution hubs in cities that include Phoenix, Los Angeles, Denver, and Chicago. Illicit drugs distributed by the Sinaloa Cartel are primarily smuggled into the United States through crossing points located along Mexico's border with California, Arizona, New Mexico, and Texas. The Sinaloa Cartel reportedly has a presence in 19 of the 32 Mexican states. It has been identified that there are currently more than 26,000 members, associates, facilitators, and brokers affiliated with the Cartel around the world.

The Jalisco Cartel:

The Jalisco Cartel is based in the city of Guadalajara in the Mexican state of Jalisco, and was originally formed as a spin off from the Milenio Cartel, a subordinate to the Sinaloa Cartel. It maintains illicit drug distribution hubs in Los Angeles, Seattle, Charlotte, Chicago, and Atlanta. Internationally, the Jalisco Cartel has a presence and influence through associates, facilitators, and brokers on every continent except Antarctica. The Jalisco Cartel smuggles illicit drugs such as fentanyl, methamphetamine, heroin, and cocaine into the United States by accessing various trafficking corridors along the southwest border including Tijuana, Mexicali, Ciudad Juarez, Matamoros, and Nuevo Laredo. The Jalisco Cartel's rapid expansion of its drug trafficking activities is characterized by the organization's willingness to engage in violent confrontations with Mexican Government security forces and rival cartels. The Jalisco Cartel reportedly has a presence in 21 of the 32 Mexican states. It has been identified that there are currently more than 18,800 members, associates, facilitators, and brokers affiliated with the Cartel around the world.

The PRC and Precursor Chemicals Chemical companies within the PRC produce and sell the majority of precursor chemicals that are used by the Sinaloa and Jalisco Cartels to manufacture fentanyl and methamphetamine. These precursor chemicals from companies within the PRC are the foundation of the fentanyl and methamphetamine that are manufactured and transported from Mexico into the United States, and that are causing tens of thousands of drug-related deaths in our country. Chemical companies within the PRC distribute and sell precursor chemicals that are used in fentanyl and methamphetamine production around the world. Some companies within the PRC, for example, engage in false cargo labeling and ship chemicals to Mexico without tracking the customers purchasing the chemicals from the PRC and elsewhere. In recent weeks, DEA has had productive engagements with Chinese counterparts in Beijing and Washington, D.C. focused on increasing cooperation between our countries. DEA remains ready to work with the PRC and all willing partners to reduce the flow of precursor chemicals and the deadly synthetic drugs they produce.

Chinese Money Laundering Operations and the Cartels:

The Sinaloa and Jalisco Cartels utilize Chinese Money Laundering Organizations (CMLOs) in the United States and around the world to facilitate laundering drug proceeds. CMLOs use mirror transfers, trade-based money laundering and bulk cash movement to facilitate the exchange of foreign currency. The use of CMLOs by the cartels simplifies the money laundering process and streamlines the purchase of precursor chemicals utilized in manufacturing drugs. These money laundering schemes are designed to remedy two separate issues: (1) the desire of Mexican cartels to repatriate drug proceeds into the Mexican banking system, and (2) wealthy Chinese nationals who are restricted by the PRC's capital flight laws from transferring large sums of money held in Chinese bank accounts for use abroad. To address these issues, CMLOs acquire U.S. dollars held by Mexican cartels as a means to supply their customers in the PRC.

But as noted above, cartels do not confine themselves to mere drug activity. Cartel violence, and their ability to extend their tendrils throughout our country, has increased to the point that situations such as these are sadly routine:

- We heard from one individual who is awaiting a prison sentence for trafficking fentanyl provided to him by a cartel source. While he was willing to plead guilty and face decades in prison, he was afraid to identify his source to law enforcement, because as he flatly put it, they would torture and murder him and his family.
- Cartels have ambushed, shot, and killed American law enforcement and Border Patrol officers (we heard from some firsthand).
- They have fired at officers who were attempting to rescue people in the desert.
- On September 10, 2022, cartels shot seven people, among them American citizens, who drove across the border in nearby Ciudad Miguel Aleman.

- The Mayor of Tijuana lives on a military base and requires armed escorts just to get her hair styled, due to the threats against her because of her anti-cartel actions.
- We have been provided reports of complete road shutdowns by cartel members who forced children off school buses, and have observed infants and small children abandoned by the cartels in the desert as they flee to evade law enforcement.
- We have seen small children dropped from border walls and abandoned to fend for themselves in the Rio Grande courtesy of cartel smugglers.

In two other examples:

ABC news reported in August of 2023 that:

Prosecutors in the western state of Jalisco say they are investigating a video, and relatives of the missing group of young friends told local media that their clothing resembled that worn by the men in the video.

The most horrifying thing is not just the pair of bound, inert bodies seen lying in the foreground. It is the fact that the youth seen bludgeoning and apparently decapitating another victim appears to be himself the fourth member of the kidnapped group of friends.

The fifth member of the kidnapped group — young friends who had traveled to attend a festival in the city of Lagos de Moreno in Jalisco state — may be the body police found inside a burned-out car in the area. The young men went missing Friday in an area known for cartel violence, and authorities have mounted a massive search for them.

Luis Méndez Ruiz, the Jalisco state attorney general, said Tuesday that the men seen in the video “could be the five men who are being searched for. This video and the information that was made public on a social media platform is now part of the investigation,” Méndez said. The clothing worn by the men in the video also resembles a photo of them alive, but bound, that was released earlier.

The likelihood that the video was authentic increased further Wednesday, when investigators raided a series of brick and concrete ranch buildings where the brutal scene was apparently taped. They found bloodstains on the floor and shoes scattered about. The video features a text written over the image that says “Puro MZ,” an apparent reference to El Mayo Zambada, the leader of a faction of the Sinaloa drug cartel.

CBS News reported in September of 2023 that:

Eleven Mexican former police officers were found guilty on Thursday in the murders of 17 migrants who were shot and burned near the United States border, prosecutors said. After a trial that lasted more than three months, judge Patricio Lugo Jaramillo ruled there was enough evidence to convict the former police officers.

The killings took place on Jan. 21, 2021 in the community of Santa Anita in Tamaulipas state, close to the border with the United States, where 16 migrants from Guatemala and one from Honduras were headed.

The victims "lost their lives due to gunshot wounds and were subsequently incinerated," the prosecutor's statement read. The charred bodies were found in a truck in the municipality of Camargo, a major smuggling transit point for drugs and migrants. Organized crime groups covet control of stretches of the border because they make money off everything that crosses the border.

Camargo is near the edge of territory historically controlled by the Gulf cartel and in recent years a remnant of the Zetas known as the Northeast cartel has tried to take over. A total of 19 bodies were discovered, including the remains of two Mexicans who, authorities said, were human traffickers who were going to take the migrants to the border.

At least 853 migrants died trying to cross the U.S.-Mexico border unlawfully over a 12-month span in 2021-2022, making fiscal year 2022 the deadliest year for migrants recorded by the U.S. government.

We have seen other videos of cartel activity so graphic and disturbing that we will not describe them further here.

We also received testimony regarding the cartels' ability to “hack” the CBP-One application by using a Virtual Private Network (VPN). At one point, the Mexican government would turn away people attempting to enter the country, unless they had a CBP One appointment. Cartels would penetrate the app and use a VPN to allow users anywhere to “schedule” their appointment, a/k/a their “transit visa through Mexico.” They also exploit it by selling off appointments to aliens seeking passage, proudly advertising their services on the internet and in migrant camps. As one expert termed it:

[W]hat they did is the smugglers now use a VPN and they – and they tell the VPN that they're in Mexico even though they're in Tajikistan. And then, when they get the appointment, instead of the person flying and cooling his heels in Mexico, he stays in Tajikistan until he gets the appointment, then gets on the plane and heads to Mexico. I mean, in a sense the CBP One app is facilitating the work of smugglers in that sense.

.... It hasn't stemmed the flow of illegal immigration; it's actually helped the cartels through their smuggling operations. They've actually made it easier. So before the cartels had to have a robust operation in the United States as well, and now all they've got to do is drop them off at our front door, at a port of entry, and we take over from there.

The goal, as always, is debt bondage; aliens may be forced as a cost of passage to ferry drugs or other people across the border, distracting law enforcement; in some cases, the distraction is necessary so incoming shipments of firearms, weapons, or bulk cash can be brought south into Mexico. Some end up working simply to pay off the cost of their passage upon threat of the death of their family in their home country or elsewhere; and they will be paying for an interminable period:

So, quickly what the cartels did, they were able to overcome the app and they're able to get anybody anywhere to get online now and get their application to come to a port of entry in the United States. It's equivalent to their Willy Wonka Chocolate Factory ticket. If they have that, it's their transit through a hundred safe third countries. As long as they have that appointment, [Border Patrol is] just stepping aside and letting them come on in, and they're making their way.

... It doesn't matter whether you're going through the Darien Gap. It doesn't matter whether you're traveling through all three Northern Triangle countries or transiting through a couple-of-thousand-mile trek through Mexico. It doesn't matter at the end whether you're going to enter illegally in between the ports of entry or use the CBP One app to come to a port of entry; you're still putting your life in the hands of the cartels. You're still being abused. You're still being exploited. And I promise you, you're having to pay for it every single day.

I mean, you really think the cartels and going to step aside and say, oh, OK, you have your appointment; go ahead, free of charge, go ahead and walk to a port of entry? That's stupid. That's not real life. That's not how that works. So the cartels every single day, it doesn't matter whether a migrant is illegally entering between the ports of entry or they're using the CBP One app, I promise you they're paying for it.

They are no longer merely “drug cartels,” though that market is still quite active. Just this past fiscal year, Border Patrol seized 27,000 pounds of fentanyl and millions of fentanyl pills (enough to kill every American 18 times), and in the second week of November 2023, seized a shipment of 304 pounds of fentanyl between ports of entry. Border Patrol estimates it only seizes around 10-15% of the fentanyl actually sent across the border, and the vast majority of what is intercepted is seized at a port of entry.

An even more lucrative market is now firmly under their control, aided by the aforementioned policies which lure a steady stream of new victims into the web: human smuggling and trafficking. As we learned from numerous witnesses, and as the House Homeland Security Committee pointed out, nearly all the illegal aliens that cross the southwest border are smuggled over by a Mexican cartel. This is because the cartels have complete operational control over the territory, including many of the points of origin, and can permit or deny passage as they see fit. Aliens are not able to pass from one “turf” to another without paying—some with money, some with debt bondage, some by agreeing to smuggle drugs or other people along with themselves, some with human commodities like their children, and some with their own lives. Most TCOs use a similar system to discriminate among those who have or have not paid the necessary bounty: colored wristbands. We have seen reporting that cartels will kill those who wear one group's band but, mistakenly or otherwise, pay off the wrong cartel for passage. Those aliens who do arrive in our country are sometimes committing criminal acts just to pay the debts incurred, so that TCOs will not harm them or those they left behind in their home countries.

TCOs thus profit from both ends of the process. Indeed, we have heard and seen evidence about how TCOs actually weaponize these alien flows, directing large numbers to cross between checkpoints in order to compel Border Patrol to pull resources from other areas to deal with them, leaving vast areas unpatrolled through which cartels bring other, more valuable (to them) commodities — high-paying illegal crossers such as terrorists, and large quantities of narcotics one direction, counter-shipments of weapons, ammunition and money the other. “High-Value Passengers” of course command the highest prices, and there is little doubt about who they are: in just this past fiscal year, Border Patrol arrested 172 denizens of the Terror Watchlist²¹ (double last year and more than the past six years combined), 598 gang members (178 from MS-13 alone), 998 persons with active warrants and 15,267 known convicted felons (35% more than last year).

With smuggling rates for illegal aliens ranging from $3,000 to $60,000, Mexican cartels treat humans as profitable cargo (as we were repeatedly told by witnesses, while drugs can only be sold and consumed once, the same is not true for a person—particularly a child). One victim told the New York Times, “You have to pay with your body,” and some are even forced to allow their children to be abused. Eight parents who brought single children over through the Fronton Island area reported $9,000 for the cartel to smuggle them up from Honduras. Two parents who brought one child said they paid the cartel $15,000 for the journey. We are also aware of a child smuggled from Honduras to the border who ultimately arrived in Florida and died here, the investigation of which remains ongoing.

DHS itself has reported to Congress that cartels often require:

alternative forms of payment in exchange for passage, including migrants being required to participate in smuggling controlled substances or other illicit items across the border or to work off debts through criminal activity upon arrival in the United States.

These are sophisticated networks operating in many countries, including our own (as far north as Alaska). Experts, sheriffs, civilians, border law enforcement officers, and others have also described to us:

They utilize a network ... of scouts, they're lookouts. They check on and off just like law enforcement. Anywhere from eight-hour shifts, 10-hour shifts, ²¹When all U.S. places of entry are added – by land, sea and air – another 564 people on the watchlist were caught, bringing the total to 736. By way of comparison, between fiscal 2017 and 2019, Border Patrol agents apprehended a total of 11 people on the terrorist watchlist. We also note with interest the recent admission, by the Director of the FBI in Congressional testimony, that the recent terrorist attack against Israel and subsequent reactions may “inspire” additional terrorist infiltrations and attacks within our country. Having so many confirmed terror suspects as well as so many SIA’s and persons from countries affiliated with such terrorist threats already [legally or otherwise] within our borders is another result of the policies we described.

12-hour shifts. I've seen them in South Texas as far as 30 miles into the United States. I have seen them in Arizona as far as 70 miles. They leverage two-way handheld encrypted radios, sometimes encrypted apps, and they communicate back to what is known as 'central.'

So what happens is you have these lookouts everywhere. And when what they call the 'gate' is open, the gate meaning a bend in the river or bend at your border, when there is no law enforcement, they surge with whatever commodity it is that they want to push. So, when you're talking, based on the policies, [about] all of these migrants that have come from all over the world, what is happening is the cartel by design will push hundreds of people as you have seen on every news station over the last few years. And the media focuses on that. That causes the surge of local state and federal law enforcement to that location, and they do that by design because it opens up the other gates.

Now if they're going to move a commodity directly linked to a cartel boss, they'll shut down more gates to ensure that commodity makes it in.

And what they do is they contract directly with U.S.-based street gangs and what we call tier one gangs. Those are gangs which impact multiple regions in our country. They work directly with the cartels. Today it is very important to understand your U.S.-based street gangs are working side-by-side, contracting with the cartels. [...] So, when you wonder today why you are being overrun with drugs, it is because the tier one gangs, and U.S.-based street gangs are contracting and working directly with these cartels....

Historically your cartels, Mexican cartels, we call them drug cartels because that's what they were. Today, they are in over 54 countries around the world. This is not a U.S.-Mexico problem ladies and gentlemen. Cartel Jalisco New Generation, we know, is in 48. This will not stop. And now they've transitioned into the final version of human trafficking known as debt bondage, and I am holding it in my hands. This is how emboldened they've become. So, I can't stress to you [enough] that you have to take extreme action to go after these cartels and to truly create relationships with Mexico and the rest of the world in what we call a unified command and treat them as the dark networks that they are.

We have reviewed evidence and questioned experts, whistleblowers²², and law enforcement personnel from the level of local deputy and state police officer to Sheriffs in three states and special agents, those with experience in the FBI, CIA, Treasury Department, Secret Service, FDLE, FHP, and even to the very pinnacle of leadership in ICE, Border Patrol, and the Department of Homeland Security regarding the potential hazards posed by individuals either outright smuggled in by these cartels or camouflaged among the flow of inadequately-vetted aliens. From the perspective of national security, the policies we described have created an environment of crisis; there is zero doubt that among the millions casually invited or illegally smuggled in are many individuals with bad intentions who have entered the country without the agencies designed to know, understand, and deal with the threats they represent having any idea who they are, where they are, what their history is, and how to adequately screen or monitor them. What is undeniable is that at least some of them are now in Florida. Even one is too many.

Several experts suggested that the cartels be equated with, and designated as, foreign terrorist organizations under 8 U.S.C. 1189, to unlock certain additional methods for lawfully combatting them. We realize our State cannot make such a designation, but we recommend that our federal representatives seriously entertain such a measure.

We also believe it would be appropriate for our State leaders to enhance the sentence for a person convicted of a criminal offense who is proven to be a member of a cartel or TCO, much as is the case already with enhanced sentencing for gang membership. These are no longer simply thugs with small armies; they are essentially absurdly wealthy mini-countries in a perpetually belligerent posture.

²² We also heard from a Florida attorney, who works as an immigration lawyer and is involved in the immigrant community. He has publicly exposed the presence of some of these criminal actors (including gang members) in our state (which is terrorized by these groups). He also pointed out the fact that they have in some cases been brought to Florida courtesy of federal agencies. For his candor, he has received death threats and online attacks from the criminals and their sycophants. We commend his courage in coming forward.

DOMESTIC SPILLOVER

When any group of human beings numbering in the millions is considered, there are bound to be those among them who are criminal actors.²³ Immigrants are not an exception. Criminal activity related to these issues is not confined to outside-- or even just inside-- our borders.

DHS' ERO conducts removals of individuals without a lawful basis to remain in the United States. For reference, in fiscal year 2022, ERO arrested 46,396 noncitizens with criminal histories. This group had 198,498 associated charges and convictions, including 21,531 assault offenses; 8,164 sex and sexual assault offenses; 5,554 weapons offenses; 1,501 homicide-related offenses; and 1,114 kidnapping offenses.

These numbers show a marked increase from relatively recent history, which was by no means unblemished in this regard. The Government Accountability Office (GAO) occasionally publishes data on "Criminal Alien Statistics, Incarcerations, Arrests, Convictions, Costs, and Removals," having most recently done so in 2018. According to that report, which does not measure all alien crime but only a select few states and some federal crimes:

Since there are no reliable data on criminal aliens incarcerated in all state prisons and local jails, we analyzed conviction data from the five state prison systems that had the largest number of State Criminal Alien Assistance Program (SCAAP) criminal alien incarcerations in fiscal year 2015.

The GAO found that from fiscal years 2011 through 2016,

- the criminal alien proportion of the total estimated federal inmate population was 21 percent, or about 39,500 inmates.

²³ We are aware of arguments attempting to compare the rates of criminal offenses between alien and citizen populations. These arguments appear to proceed from flawed premises to draw faulty conclusions. For starters, a great many alien criminal histories are unknowable, as their countries of origin either keep inaccurate data or do not share it with the United States at all; likewise, most states do not track such data, as we have explained within.

Second, every crime committed by illegally present immigrants with prior criminal histories was avoidable, since if their history was known they should have been removed or denied entry, whereas citizens cannot be blocked from American territory so as to be unavailable to commit crime. As one commentator put it, "The DHS detention and removal process cannot and will not ever prevent a single crime by an American citizen."

- the number of SCAAP criminal alien incarcerations in state prisons and local jails was about 169,300, or 40 percent.
- certain states—including California, which has the highest number of SCAAP criminal aliens—did not report or were unable to report data on the number of noncitizens.
- 62 percent of the SCAAP criminal aliens were arrested/transferred in one of three states—California, Texas, and Florida.
- the approximately 533,000 SCAAP criminal aliens in the state and local study population were arrested/transferred for a total of about 5.5 million offenses, averaging about 10 offenses per SCAAP criminal alien.
- also estimated that the total amount that state prison systems expended totaled about $6.7 billion over the 6 years.

As for immigration offenders, GAO found that:

- Order of removal or previously removed. About 55,700, or 77 percent, appeared to have a pending order of removal or were previously removed by ICE with no subsequent record of a legal reentry.
- In removal proceedings. About 5,000, or 7 percent, were in removal proceedings at the time of their incarceration, as indicated by ICE’s review of records. In other words, they appeared to have a removal case in process in immigration court.
- Subject to removal. About 11,800, or 16 percent, may have been subject to removal at the time of their incarceration, as indicated by ICE’s review of records.
- About 4,700 criminal aliens did not have a record of admission or a record of other authorized presence in the United States.

Federally, there were 196 terrorism convictions, 72 murders, 123 kidnappings, nearly 3,500 firearm convictions, and 591 sex offenses among the 200,000 federally-convicted alien criminals.

In the few states for which data was available,

- Arizona: Drug offenses accounted for 47 percent of the more than 6,300 primary offenses for which SCAAP criminal aliens were convicted.
- California: Homicide and sex offenses accounted for about 53 percent of the more than 18,600 primary offenses for which SCAAP criminal aliens were convicted.

- Florida: Homicide and sex offenses accounted for 45 percent of the nearly 6,300 primary offenses for which SCAAP criminal aliens were convicted.
- New York: Homicide and sex offenses accounted for 49 percent of the nearly 3,400 primary offenses for which SCAAP criminal aliens were convicted.
- Texas: Sex, drug, and assault offenses accounted for 52 percent of the nearly 9,600 primary offenses for which SCAAP criminal aliens were convicted.

Among states, only Texas routinely collects such data at the local level. The Texas Department of Public Safety receives data from local jails through a program that submits fingerprints to the FBI for criminal history and warrant checks, and to DHS, which returns immigration status. According to DHS status indicators, over 419,000 criminal aliens have been booked into local Texas jails between June 1, 2011 and October 31, 2023, of which over 292,000 were classified as illegal aliens by DHS. According to their data:

Between June 1, 2011, and October 31, 2023, these 292,000 illegal aliens were charged with more than 499,000 criminal offenses which included arrests for 933 homicide charges; 62,624 assault charges; 9,050 burglary charges; 59,090 drug charges; 1,103 kidnapping charges; 24,722 theft charges; 38,989 obstructing police charges; 2,844 robbery charges; 6,320 sexual assault charges; 7,318 sexual offense charges; and 6,052 weapon charges. DPS criminal history records reflect those criminal charges have thus far resulted in over 183,000 convictions including 457 homicide convictions; 22,916 assault convictions; 4,580 burglary convictions; 24,803 drug convictions; 316 kidnapping convictions; 9,520 theft convictions; 15,496 obstructing police convictions; 1,607 robbery convictions; 2,998 sexual assault convictions; 3,364 sexual offense convictions; and 1,997 weapon convictions.

These figures only count individuals who previously had an encounter with DHS that resulted in their fingerprints being entered into the DHS IDENT database. Foreign nationals who enter the country illegally and avoid detection by DHS but are later arrested by local or state law enforcement for a state offense will not have a DHS response in regard to their lawful status and do not appear in these counts.

[Additionally], the Department of Criminal Justice (TDCJ) [Texas prisons] has provided DPS with information on more than 31,000 individuals who were identified by DHS as in the country illegally while they were incarcerated at TDCJ. 10,747 of these individuals were not identified through the PEP program at the time of their arrest.

We believe Florida should begin tracking this same type of data regarding the immigration status of arrestees, and mandate its reporting to FDLE for retention and publication. We recommend that our leaders adopt a law requiring the Department of Corrections, each County Sheriff, and the Chief of Police of any law enforcement agency in this state to provide such data to FDLE along with the other data they are already sending.

Moreover, given the large number of inmates reflected by SCAAP and the Texas DPS data who had been ordered removed but remained to commit more crimes, we recommend that our leaders look into adding a sentencing enhancement provision such as that below which would increase the exposure for those who have been previously deported and return to commit a felony offense in our state.

921.0024(1)(a) Sentencing multipliers:

Prior Removal/Deportation: If the offender has been previously deported or removed from the United States pursuant to law, the subtotal sentence points are multiplied by 1.5.

INHUMAN ACTS, HUMAN COSTS

Among the many facets of illegal immigration to which we have been exposed, the increasingly pervasive impacts of cartel-driven gang activity is the one which has, in ways both direct and indirect, left a mark at some level upon every citizen of this State. While the harms visited upon any community by illegal narcotics have been known for decades, the seemingly unchecked mass illegal entry into this country at our southern border has brought forth a criminal paradigm not witnessed to such an extent for multiple generations. That is, our nation has witnessed an invasion of criminal enterprises that are every bit as ruthless, dangerous, profitable, and powerful as those which operated for decades in the last century under the rubric of the Mafia.

Over the course of our sessions we heard extensive testimony conveying daily conditions along the border between the United States and Mexico. Several witnesses provided photographic and video presentations which illustrated their descriptions. The descriptions and images depicting crowds of migrants carried with them little in the way of shock value or even surprise. Regardless of one's philosophical bent towards the issue of immigration, it is an inescapable fact that the flow of immigrants into this country is and has been occurring at a staggering rate in recent years. This reality is confirmed by even a cursory review on a given day of most any broadcast news network or website. We further believe that these facts are not partisan.

It is when we delve into the real and potential impacts presented by a particular component of immigration—the purely criminal element—that the eyewitness accounts we heard from individuals who were on scene become most illuminating. These immersive perspectives—boots on the ground in the parlance—have conveyed to us a reality which was stated most grimly by a ranch owner from southern Texas. This man's dreams of a quiet retirement on his generational land along the border have been dashed by almost daily damage to his property and the continuous potential for violence directed to his family. His first-hand observation was simply this: if the lack of desire at the national level to enforce border security continues, this country will be lost.

This was one of many individual plights we heard about, every one tragic in its own way, and all a direct consequence of the massive influx occurring at the United States border with Mexico. As will be further delineated later in this report, each such tale carries both a profound human component while also serving as a cautionary tale about the new reality to be encountered when every community is a border community.

Although we were thorough about reviewing hard statistics, we certainly reviewed our share of direct testimony and evidence regarding the nature and costs of these crimes which do not come through from data alone. We spoke with some victim advocates who try to rescue particularly women and children who are forced into prostitution and what amounts to sexual slavery by TCOs. The anguish in their voices alone was enough to convey the depth of this scourge. The fact that current government policies abet such levels of depravity makes the cut even deeper. We commend the courage and compassion of their work, and thank them for sharing their experiences.

We also received evidence and testimony from citizen journalists, ranchers, state and federal law enforcement officers, and victims as far away as Arizona, California, Maryland, New Jersey, Texas, Utah, and Virginia. Many of them testified and presented video evidence, both heart-wrenching and revolting, regarding crimes committed in the recent past, even during the time we have been meeting. We appreciate our witnesses being willing to discuss these tragedies despite the obvious anguish this caused. These are but a few of the horrific cases and disturbing allegations we studied, watched happen, and were horrified by:

- In Maryland, an illegal alien gang member sodomized and murdered an autistic female in a trailer park.
- In Texas, a Guatemalan originally admitted as a UAC raped and strangled an 11-year-old girl in Pasadena. He then stuffed the child's body into a laundry basket and hid it under her bed.
- In San Antonio, an illegal alien who has been deported 15 times was arrested for prostituting and sexually assaulting a teenage girl who was being sheltered by her trafficker last year at a stash house used for human smuggling; he housed the girl and allowed men to have sex with her for $150, according to an affidavit supporting his arrest. He had been deported in the previous year, but was later arrested on a South Texas ranch after once again crossing illegally with a large group.
- Cartel members in armored vehicles containing military-grade weapons traveled on an Interstate highway in Arizona, fearlessly passing law enforcement vehicles on two occasions.

- Also in Texas, a Mexican previously deported four times murdered an entire family of Honduran migrants with an illegally-owned rifle.
- Here in Polk County, Florida, an illegal alien speeding to an illegal worksite smashed his pickup truck into a high school girl's car, killing some of his passengers and grievously injuring the girl.
- Also in Polk County, 35 illegal aliens were among hundreds arrested as part of a human trafficking and prostitution sting.
- In Pinellas County, Florida, an illegal alien illegally working on a road construction project ran over and killed a deputy sheriff with a piece of heavy construction equipment, then fled while his fellow illegal alien road crew members lied to police.
- On August 1, 2023, the FBI announced the results of a nationwide sting called Operation Cross Country XIII targeting those suspected of child sexual exploitation or human trafficking. In Bay County, Florida, 7 illegal aliens were among the arrestees.
- In Jacksonville, an illegal alien masquerading as an unaccompanied minor violently murdered his sponsor.
- In Fort Myers, an illegal alien murdered a police officer with the officer's own gun when being arrested for robbery.
- Also in Fort Myers, an illegal alien pretending to be a cab driver picked up a woman from a nightclub, drove her to a secluded location, raped her, punched her in the head and then strangled and threatened to kill her.
- In Daytona Beach, an illegal alien stabbed a bicycling couple to death during Bike Week.
- In Miami, less than a month ago, Border Patrol agents identified both a boat and a stash house used for human smuggling, making six arrests.
- Last year law enforcement officers disrupted a multi-layered narcotics organization in Orlando operating at the direction of one of the most notorious Mexican cartels and carrying out enforcement of their code by way of multiple assassins who fired into a vehicle in broad daylight while on a crowded six-lane thoroughfare.
- Near Tampa, FDLE agents were ambushed trying to effectuate an arrest of an illegal alien, and one was nearly killed during the exchange.

SMUGGLER BLUES

Specific crimes are also manifested in a burgeoning human smuggling industry. In Southern border communities, one Texas Sheriff's department arrested 169 human smugglers in 2021, but was on pace to arrest more than 900 this year. Arizona sheriffs reported similar problems— compounded by the fact that a section of that border is comprised of a Native reservation upon which they have no jurisdiction. Florida Highway Patrol continues to intercept smugglers on our highways, and FDLE works with Border Patrol interdicting such activity along our coastline and in our ports.

We have seen numerous horrifying accounts and photographic documentation of the “stash houses” in which dozens of human chattel spend their days as de facto hostages waiting for the cartel to release them or the next smuggler to arrive. Another sheriff said his county deals with 3-4 high-speed chases per day, involving groups of 20 people or more; Texas DPS data disclosed more than 150 such pursuits for the month of August alone. The cartels are recruiting American citizens and other aliens already in the country to drive for them, offering thousands of dollars via social media apps to pick up illegal alien passengers who have evaded border checkpoints and need transportation from their remote crossing point, including the recent arrest of a school bus driver using his bus to smuggle aliens. We have seen the “want ads,” we have watched dozens of illegal entrants boil out of the bed of a single pickup truck fleeing from Border Patrol; and we have seen the video evidence of high-velocity pursuits ending in carnage, mayhem, and death to innocent civilians. We have received testimony and evidence regarding, among other things,

- ranchers who report massive waves of illegal traffic across their property, including cutting of fences, killing, escape, or theft of livestock, destruction of water tanks holding thousands of gallons needed in arid country (and taking weeks to replace), theft of heavy tractor equipment and wagons; cartel shootings and high-speed vehicle crashes; and even accosting of family members on their front porches by lone aliens or groups demanding water, food, or shelter;
- female ranchers feeling forced to venture onto their own property only while armed;
- innocent travelers now routinely maimed and killed in grisly fashion because a smuggler crashed his vehicle into theirs trying to elude capture; the week before we met to publish this report, a 17-year-old Honduran human smuggler fleeing from law enforcement smashed head-on into another car in Texas, killing himself, his five illegally-present Honduran passengers, and (in the other car) a retired couple from Georgia;²⁴

- cattle herds being infected with diseases traced to foreign origination, like particular strains of tuberculosis or anthrax, resulting in the forced destruction of herds up to ten thousand head;
- the loss of resale value and income from being able to rent land for hunting due to the human foot traffic and loss of high-priced game animals;
- small border towns in Texas and Arizona infiltrated by cartels—or at least their proxies—to the extent that law enforcement is able to detect which restaurants and other businesses are ‘controlled’ and by whom;
- the agonizing feelings that come with finding abandoned children, “rape trees” and corpses scattered about their property and essentially being held hostage to threat of near-daily incursions in remote country where the nearest law enforcement help may be fifty miles away²⁵;
- property owners along the border who feel compelled to warn campers, sightseers, or visitors of the hazards in manners such as this:

²⁴ In April 2019, the driver had crossed the border illegally and was given a notice to appear. In November, a judge ordered him removed from the country; this was not done. In April, 2023, he was caught as part of a failed human smuggling attempt in Texas. Once again, he was turned over to Border Patrol, which turned him over to HHS. That agency ignored the court order, sent him back to live with his mother in Houston, and now will not have to enforce the court order, since he and seven other people are tragically dead.

Unfortunately, we could add to this list enough tragic and specific cases to comprise another entire presentment, but we believe the point has been made. Americans and Floridians suffer horrifying crimes which do not have to occur.

Yet some claim to be ignorant of the multitude of evils perpetrated by these organizations, and others are deliberately complicit. We refer here to those who willingly accept payment to become smugglers themselves, and those like the school administrator in Rhode Island who:

- learned one of the students was working so hard that he was getting no sleep because he owed money to the group that had unlawfully smuggled him into the country and was threatening to butcher his family
- solicited funds on the school's email list to help "pay the coyotes"
- rather than notify law enforcement.

We refer also to two soldiers from Louisiana, sent to Texas to ostensibly help secure the border, who were arrested in the act of smuggling illegal aliens across the border in their personal vehicles.

We refer also to the 19-year-old "TikTok Influencer" who was killed in 2021, in Zavala County, Texas (90 miles from the border) attempting to smuggle illegal alien passengers.

We refer also to people like two Dallas residents facing alien smuggling charges for, according to the Border Report, using their son's and granddaughter's birth certificates to bring two unauthorized Mexican nationals into the United States. In October, they attempted to drive from Mexico to the U.S., and handed a U.S. Customs and Border Protection officer two Texas birth certificates on behalf of children they claimed were their son and granddaughter. The officer turned to the "13-year-old" to ask routine questions in English, which he did not appear to understand. He then turned to the younger female child and got an answer that did not match the documents. The 13-year-old "child" admitted to the officer his name, that he was 21, and that he was born in Tejupilco, Mexico, that his brother paid 100,000 pesos ($5,476) to the Texas couple to smuggle him into the United States and would pay a similar amount later. The girl in the vehicle gave officers contact information for her mother, who confirmed to officers that the girl was a Mexican national.

Just days before this report was written, Texas DPS arrested two smugglers in the act:

Texas DPS Trooper disrupted a human smuggling attempt on RR 334 in Kinney County. The trooper arrested the driver, from Pasadena, after multiple illegal immigrants fled from the vehicle. The trooper attempted to detain one of the illegal immigrants who pushed & struggled against the trooper. A search of the vehicle revealed two unaccompanied children from Mexico, ages 7 & 9, in the cargo area.

The driver, a confirmed Tango Blast gang member, faces charges for human smuggling. The passenger, an illegal immigrant from Mexico, faces charges for evading & resisting arrest. The driver was transporting the illegal immigrants to Houston. The children were going to be smuggled to California.

The driver had multiple tattoos of the folk saint Santa Muerte. The Santa Muerte is common among those engaged in criminal activity & the Mexican drug cartels who worship & seek protection, healing, financial well-being, and assurance of a path to the afterlife.

Such people deserve the full measure of whatever penalty the law can impose. These are the realities, multiple times a day, every day.

Many aliens who reach the areas around our border are physically spent and in immediate danger of death. The terrain and weather are unforgiving; this is likewise true here in Florida, where coastal landings can be fraught with peril from rip currents, pounding surf, and predators such as sharks. As of September 15, 2023, CBP personnel had conducted 32,754 rescues in FY23; in FY22, CBP conducted 22,522 rescue operations. These range from helicopter or fan-boat deployments to jumping into fast-moving rivers to driving away cartel gunmen to liberating desperate human beings from dangerous reefs, locked semitrailers, filthy sewers and tunnels, and drug-infested stash houses. They are shot at, spit on, bitten, and regularly exposed to deadly drugs like fentanyl. They get little, if any, thanks or recognition and they do all this to rescue aliens who are committing criminal acts by entering far from appropriate ports of entry. We have seen lone Border Patrol agents struggling to patrol 20-mile sections of undefended beach, trying to catch one fence-jumper as five others use the diversion to run past, and speeding over rough desert terrain to pursue yet another truck full of smugglers and their cargo. Yet, to their credit, they continue to answer the call. In December 2022, Border Patrol agent Raul Gonzalez was killed while attempting to apprehend a group of illegal aliens near Mission, Texas. The House Committee on Homeland Security noted a significant increase in such violent incidents beginning within the last two or three years.

Now-Chief Jason Owens, then-chief patrol agent for the Del Rio Sector, told the House Committee in May 2023 that the nature of the job presents inherent risks to agents, and the Committee found:

When [Border Patrol agents] go out on patrol, a lot of the time, their backup may not know exactly where they are, and if they do, they may be several minutes away. Whenever they go out on an encounter, a lot of times, they are vastly outnumbered. And people that they encounter are a mix of good people simply coming and looking for a better way of life or bad actors that would do them or the communities harm. And they have to exercise judgment and treat everybody accordingly in a split-second notice.

Border Patrol agents also literally put themselves in the line of fire when rescuing aliens. A CBP press release from May 19, 2023, recounted two separate incidents of gunfire that month in the vicinity of agents responding to crossings and rendering aid in the San Diego Sector. After agents in the San Diego Sector were fired upon while attempting to apprehend a group of illegal aliens in August 2023, Patricia McGurk-Daniel, chief patrol agent for the sector, said, “Smuggling organizations are becoming desperate and escalating their level of violence because of the work being performed by U.S. Border Patrol agents.”

On Aug. 18, 2023, Border Patrol Chief Owens tweeted, “USBP agents in El Paso Sector came under fire while arresting 3 subjects as 2 others fled back into Mexico. Fortunately, nobody was injured, but these are the very real dangers our agents face every day on the frontline. Unsurprisingly, Border Patrol morale has fallen so low that 17 CBP personnel committed suicide in 2022—the highest total in 13 years, including three within three weeks of each other in November 2022. And nearly 40 of them have been lost in the last two years.

We interviewed witnesses, including senior (current and former) members of the Border Patrol, ICE, and the Department of Homeland Security from the absolute top levels down to former line officers. Uniformly, we heard the same lament: dedicated individuals who signed on to enforce our nation’s laws are instead prohibited from actually doing so and conscripted into duty as mere processors of “efficiency.” They would prefer to be interdicting smugglers such as those described above; instead, they are required to simply nod and process. Even the elite “BORTAC” unit, which has participated in the apprehension of some of the nation’s most dangerous and notorious criminals in recent memory, has been tasked with such “desk duty.”

In May 2023, the DHS Office of the Inspector General (OIG) released a report documenting how the record surge of illegal aliens across the border has negatively impacted the health and morale of CBP and ICE officials:

Parents are missing 30% of the year, and [are] unable to participate in many family functions. This causes much stress on the parents and children, ... We need more staff and better shifts that allow for more time off with families. Divorce rates and suicides are rampant in the agency. [The agency forces] a ridiculous ‘anti-suicide’ app onto our phones which cannot be deleted yet make us leave our homes and live in a hotel where we can’t even eat healthily. This nightmare is forced upon us without a care of our mental or physical health.

The IG report also documented a major increase in the suicide rate.

It is unrealistic to expect this situation not to have a deleterious effect on law enforcement and its operational capabilities. While Border Patrol, ICE, FDLE, FHP, and local Sheriffs are enduring, the fact that so much unnecessary stress is being placed upon them as a result of current policies should not escape notice.

As the House Homeland Security Committee found in its October 10, 2023 report,

CBP and ICE personnel regularly reported that their agencies were not appropriately staffed to deal with the crisis, and that they were not being allowed to do the law enforcement jobs they signed to up to do: “Our interviews and survey comments showed staff frustration and lower morale related to changing policies, especially when the respondents felt the changes were inconsistent with their law enforcement duties. In the view of some law enforcement personnel these policies have made it difficult for them to enforce the laws and carry out their mission; one said they felt as if they were doing their job ‘with one hand tied behind [their] back.’”

In the [Inspector General] report, one agent vented frustration at being prevented “from doing the other part of the duties/responsibilities we were hired for, which is deterring or apprehending individuals that have made an illegal entry into the United States.” When asked during a transcribed interview with the House Committee on Homeland Security if he had heard similar complaints voiced by his agents in the El Paso Sector, Chief Patrol Agent Good confirmed that he had, as did Joel Martinez, chief patrol agent for the Laredo Sector. Jason Owens, now chief of the Border Patrol, told Committee staff in May 2023 he had also heard agents use the “one hand tied behind their back” expression.

The resulting stress on the men and women of CBP and ICE has spiraled out of control, with the OIG report concluding that approximately a quarter of the agents surveyed could be expected to leave the force unless changes were made. The reason? “...[S]truggles with carrying out their law enforcement duties as well as morale as issues influencing their decision to either leave or retire[.]”

Candidly, the policies being forced upon Border Patrol, ICE, ERO, and other law-enforcement agencies seem designed to intentionally discourage actual law enforcement. This Potemkin veneer fools the unaware into thinking that laws are being enforced. But it overwhelms with sheer volume the innate disposition we sensed among many of these witnesses to buckle down, work harder, and try to catch the bad guys. The frustration in their voices and carved into their expressions made their anguish palpable to us. Funding the hiring of more agents does little good if those agents are essentially handcuffed to their desks.

These policies seem the same in design and effect as those imposed by other bureaucrats running HHS and ORR which attempt to prevent law enforcement officers from investigating trafficked children and predatory sponsors in the UAC arena, as we documented in two of our earlier reports; perhaps this is what is meant by a “whole of government approach.”

We can certainly see how anyone could get demoralized when they are accustomed to supporting their family by engaging in the noble profession of protecting public safety, only to be handcuffed by petulant bureaucrats. We express our gratitude to each of them, and to the civilian and law enforcement witnesses who shared their testimony with us, including our local Sheriff’s deputies, FHP troopers, and FDLE agents. We wish we could offer more.

These are the policies:

V. THREATS TO INFRASTRUCTURE

We received testimony and evidence regarding landings along Florida's coastal borders so numerous they required days to process, the complete shutdown of the Dry Tortugas National Park and the declaration of a State of Emergency throughout the Florida Keys; damage to reefs and marine life; motorized craft dumping groups of aliens to flee along Palm Beach; and the mobilization and overtime duty by a large portion of our State's Florida Department of Law Enforcement to assist local Sheriffs and federal authorities in interdicting small flotillas.

We received much evidence and testimony regarding activity by foreign nationals, primarily from countries holding special significance due to terrorism or espionage concerns (Iran, China, or Yemen, for example). We are aware that the Department of Homeland Security's "2024 Threat Assessment" included warnings about this type of potential attack:

OVERVIEW Critical infrastructure provides the goods and services that are the backbone of our national and economic security and the well-being of all Americans. Within this section, we considered physical and cyber threats from domestic and foreign actors—including terrorists, adversarial nation-states, and non-state actors—to the resources, assets, and structures of our critical infrastructure sectors.

Domestic and foreign adversaries likely will continue to threaten the integrity of US critical infrastructure—including the transportation sector—over the next year, in part because they perceive targeting these sectors would have cascading impacts on US industries and the American way of life.

Complex economic threats from state and non-state actors, primarily the People's Republic of China and financially motivated cyber criminals, harm US producers and consumers and degrade the competitiveness of our companies and industries. Our adversaries will continue manipulating markets, employing economic espionage and coercive economic tools, and seeking to illicitly acquire our technologies and intellectual property.

In addition, the composition of those coming to the border has increased greatly in diversity, to the point that (per TRAC),

What is even more remarkable than the recent overall increase in Border Patrol arrests is the number of arrests of migrants who were from beyond

Mexico or the Northern Triangle countries. Fiscal year 2021 saw a dramatic increase in the number of these migrants, which grew from just 7,777 in FY 2011 to over a third of a million arrests (367,275) in FY 2021. These numbers increased again to 728,742 arrests in FY 2022, marking the first year that non-Mexican and non-Northern Triangle nationalities outpaced the other two.

CPB defines a Special Interest Alien (SIA) as a person who "potentially poses a national security risk to the United States or its interests. Often such individuals or groups are employing travel patterns known or evaluated to possibly have a nexus to terrorism." CPB encountered 25,627 SIAs in fiscal year 2022 (compared to 3,675 the fiscal year before) as well as 172 designated on the Terrorism Watchlist. We also reviewed FBI reports that just a month ago, the FBI had to scramble to locate a dozen Uzbekistanis allowed into the US after they sought asylum at the southern border with Mexico with the help of a smuggler with ties to ISIS.

Finally, 52,000 or so Chinese aliens appeared at our borders in recent months (a 1,300% increase). The United States State Department imposed sanctions against several Chinese companies in April 2023 because they supply much of the flow of precursor chemicals used by cartels to manufacture fentanyl in Guatemala and Mexico. Moreover, as reported by the Wall Street Journal,

Chinese nationals, sometimes posing as tourists, have accessed military bases and sensitive sites in the U.S. as many as 100 times in recent years... [as the WSJ reported] citing U.S. officials who described the incidents as potential espionage threats.

The incidents, which U.S. officials describe as a form of espionage, appear designed to test security practices at U.S. military installations and other federal sites. Officials familiar with the practice say the individuals are typically Chinese nationals pressed into service and required to report back to the Chinese government.

Concern over the base intrusions comes amid rising U.S.-China tensions, which spiked after a Chinese balloon overflew the U.S. earlier this year carrying what officials said was surveillance equipment. The incidents also cast a light on concerns that Beijing is using nontraditional means to gather intelligence on U.S. soil, whether through proximity to bases or through Chinese-produced commercial equipment that could be used to spy.

Officials at the White House and the Department of Homeland Security declined to comment, and the Pentagon only responded broadly to the issue. Government officials referred queries to the Federal Bureau of Investigation, which said: “The Chinese government is engaged in a broad, diverse campaign of theft and malign influence without regard to laws or international norms that the FBI will not tolerate.”

Officials described incidents in which Chinese nationals say they have a reservation at an on-base hotel. In a recent case, a group of Chinese nationals claiming they were tourists, tried to push past guards at Fort Wainwright, Alaska, saying they had reservations at a commercial hotel on the base. The base is home to the Army’s 11th Airborne Division, which is focused on Arctic warfare.

These cases at times occur in rural areas where officials indicate there is little tourism far from a commercial airport. The individuals use what appears to be scripted language when confronted by security guards, according to officials familiar with the tactics. When stopped, the Chinese nationals say they are tourists and have lost their way.

The problem of low-level Chinese intelligence collection like this is well known in intelligence circles, said Emily Harding, a senior fellow at the Center for Strategic and International Studies in Washington and a former deputy staff director at the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence. It is a numbers game, she said.

“The advantage the Chinese have is they are willing to throw people at collection in large numbers,” she said. “If a few of them get caught, it will be very difficult for the U.S. government to prove anything beyond trespassing, and those who don’t get caught are likely to collect something useful.”

Harding said that because most incidents in the U.S. can be pursued only as trespassing, the Chinese government gives a collective shrug for those who do get caught. The base penetrations are considered a concerning and growing trend, U.S. military and other officials said.

In some cases, individuals did gain unauthorized access to a base, “often by speeding through security checkpoints,” said Sue Gough, a Pentagon spokeswoman. “These individuals are often cited criminally, barred from future installation access and escorted off-base,” she said.

There are repeated cases in which Chinese nationals have been found taking pictures at a U.S. Army range, according to people familiar with the matter. They often start off at nearby White Sands National Park, where visitors like to barrel down the sand dunes on rented slides, but then leave that area and cross into the adjacent missile site, the officials said.

In some cases, the individuals have used drones to bolster their surveillance efforts.

There have been repeated incidents at an intelligence center based in Key West, Fla., starting some years ago, where Chinese nationals, saying they were tourists, were found swimming in the waters near the military facility and taking pictures, according to officials familiar with the matter.

In at least one instance, an incursion there resulted in arrests and prosecutions that were made public. In 2020, three Chinese citizens were sentenced to about a year in prison after pleading guilty to illegally entering the naval air station in Key West, and taking photos by either walking around the fence line and entering it from the beach, or driving in and ignoring orders to turn around.

In another incident, Chinese nationals appear to have been found scuba diving off Cape Canaveral, home to the Kennedy Space Center. The area is the launch site for spy satellites and other military missions.

U.S. officials also describe incidents around the White House in which Chinese nationals posing as tourists leave the designated tour area to take pictures of the grounds, including communications gear and the positions of security guards, before being shooed away by the Secret Service.

In many cases, those who have trespassed on bases, apparently deliberately, have simply been detained briefly and then escorted out of the country, officials familiar with the incidents said.

Trespass to critical infrastructure sites is certainly not limited to one nationality. However, we received testimony and evidence from several witnesses, including FDLE, that the current law is insufficient to deter such behavior or enable it to be sufficiently investigated, because much of Florida's trespass laws make this conduct a misdemeanor which results in few arrests, low if any bond, and has zero deterrent value. We learned that the State of Texas has been forced to commence arresting illegal aliens who evade Border Patrol and manage to get some distance into their State, particularly onto private land or sensitive infrastructure sites such as Starbase, home of Space X, and barely a mile from the Rio Grande. Texas has enacted very robust trespassing laws and is funding a unit of prosecutors specifically dedicated to handling these and other types of cases, such as smuggling. We appreciate their willingness to share their expertise, and we think Florida's legislature should consider enhancing our own state's trespassing laws.

We have been shown a copy of a proposed statute promulgated by the Florida Critical Infrastructure Working Group of law enforcement agencies, and we heartily endorse its adoption.

§810.09(TBD) “Trespass to Critical Infrastructure”

The offender commits a felony of the third degree, punishable as provided in s. 775.082, s. 775.083, or s. 775.084, if the property trespassed upon is a facility described herein that is legally posted and identified in substantially the following manner: “THIS AREA IS A DESIGNATED CRITICAL INFRASTRUCTURE FACILITY, AND ANYONE WHO TRESPASSES ON THIS PROPERTY COMMITS A FELONY.”

For purposes of this section, the term “CRITICAL INFRASTRUCTURE FACILITY” means any portion of said facility and curtilage to which access by the public is prohibited by fences or appropriate signs and includes laboratories, launching pads, runways, taxiways, ramps, apron areas, parking and storage areas, fuel storage areas, maintenance areas, and any other area used or equipped to be used for:

- (A) operation, landing, takeoff, or surface maneuvering of vehicles or aircraft;
- (B) a chemical manufacturing facility or refinery;
- (C) an electrical power generating facility, substation, switching station, electrical control center, or electrical transmission or distribution facility;
- (D) a water intake structure, water treatment facility, wastewater treatment plant, or pump station;
- (E) a natural gas transmission compressor station;
- (F) a liquid natural gas terminal or storage facility;
- (G) a cellular signal or relay tower or telecommunications central switching office;
- (H) a port, airport, railroad switching yard, trucking terminal, or other freight transportation facility;
- (I) a gas processing plant, including a plant used in the processing, treatment, or fractionation of natural gas;
- (J) a transmission facility used by a federally licensed radio or television station; or
- (K) a military base or military facility conducting research and development of military weapons systems, subsystems, components or parts.

VI. FLORIDA'S LAWS AND ECONOMY

We applaud the efforts of our legislature and governor during last year's session to help secure Florida and address the ongoing influx of those unlawfully entering, being smuggled, or trafficked into our State. Many victims of such activity, including children (as documented by the New York Times and others) are forced into labor markets to pay off the costs of being smuggled, or because they or their loved ones are threatened by cartel traffickers.

We have read with interest claims in various media outlets that Florida's law might have adverse economic impacts by lessening the supply of illegal alien laborers or causing some to leave the state to avoid being caught breaking the law. Such claims are almost always purely anecdotal, and generally fail to disclose whether they emanate from those legally present or those who are not—a significant distinction. Florida is home to industries, particularly agriculture, construction, and hospitality, which employ comparatively high percentages of workers who are immigrants.

The facts are that, as the Chair of the Federal Reserve has reported (in December, 2022), on a national level:

Despite the slowdown in growth, the labor market remains extremely tight, with the unemployment rate near a 50-year low, job vacancies still very high, and wage growth elevated. Job gains have been robust, with employment rising by an average of 272,000 jobs per month over the last three months. Although job vacancies have moved below their highs and the pace of job gains has slowed from earlier in the year, the labor market continues to be out of balance, with demand substantially exceeding the supply of available workers. The labor force participation rate is little changed since the beginning of the year. FOMC participants expect supply and demand conditions in the labor market to come into better balance over time, easing upward pressures on wages and prices. The median projection in the SEP for the unemployment rate rises to 4.6 percent at the end of next year.

The U.S. Chamber of Commerce (large businesses) reported:

Americans have been leaving the labor force since before the pandemic. In fact, we have 1.5 million fewer Americans participating in the labor force today compared to February of 2020.

Enhanced unemployment benefits, stimulus checks, and not being able to go out and spend money during the COVID-19 pandemic all contributed to Americans collectively adding $4 trillion to their savings accounts since early 2020. The extra few hundred dollars a week from enhanced unemployment benefits (which ended in Sept. 2021), specifically, led to 68% of claimants earning more on unemployment than they did while working.

In the Chamber's Nov. 2022 survey, 23% of women cited others in the family making enough money that working full-time is not as critical as the reason they have not re-entered the workforce.

Small business group the National Federation of Independent Businesses reported that:

43% (seasonally adjusted) of all small business owners reported job openings they could not fill in the current period, up three points from August. Owners' plans to fill open positions remain elevated, with a seasonally adjusted net 18% planning to create new jobs in the next three months.

Of those hiring or trying to hire, 93% of owners reported few or no qualified applicants for the positions they were trying to fill. Thirty percent of owners reported few qualified applicants for their open positions, and 27% reported none.

Particular industries suffer across the board, as the Fox Business network reported:

The Bureau of Labor Statistics job openings report for June 2023 found that the construction industry had roughly 374,000 job openings while manufacturing had 582,000. While the number of job openings in the two sectors shrank by about 279,000 combined openings compared to a year ago, the total remained near one million job openings for those two sectors out of the roughly 8.5 million open jobs economy-wide.

"The problem that we're facing today is that a lot of the workforce that's been engaged in those roles is retiring and we're not replenishing the workforce with new recruits into these jobs because the Millennial and Gen Z generations – they kind of grew up with a different idea in mind of what was a well-paying and what was a very meaningful job," Aidan Madigan-Curtis, a partner at venture capital firm Eclipse, told FOX Business.... She added that there's currently a shortage of about 750,000 machinists and welders which is expected to climb to 2 million to 2.5 million in the next several years.

The Washington Post echoed:

With more than 11 million job openings and only 6 million unemployed workers, employers have struggled for more than a year to hire enough people to fill their ranks. That mismatch has left employees frustrated and burnt out, and is fueling a new round of power struggles on the job....

Too many industries are still struggling to find workers. The share of working-age Americans who have a job or are looking for one is at 62.4 percent, a full percentage point lower than it was in February 2020, according to Labor Department data.

The reasons are complex and broad. Early retirements, a massive slowdown in immigration that began during the Trump administration, as well as ongoing child care and elder care challenges combined with covid-related illnesses and deaths have all cut into the number of available workers.

“If you look at sectors like nursing homes, local schools, railroads — employment has fallen like a stone,” said Lisa Lynch, an economics professor at Brandeis University and former Labor Department chief economist. “And with that, you see a marked increase in labor action and strike activity. People are tired and overworked.”

Although the U.S. economy has officially recouped the 20 million jobs it lost at the beginning of the pandemic, the gains have been uneven. Major shortfalls remain, particularly in low-wage industries that have lost workers to higher-paying opportunities in warehousing, construction, and professional and business services. The hospitality and leisure industry is still down 1.2 million jobs from February 2020. Public schools are missing nearly 360,000 workers and health care has yet to recover 37,000 positions. Rail transportation, meanwhile, is down 12,500 jobs.

And the Associated Builders and Contractors reported:

The construction industry averaged more than 390,000 job openings per month in 2022, the highest level on record, and the industry unemployment rate of 4.6% in 2022 was the second lowest on record, higher than only the 4.5% unemployment rate observed in 2019. National payroll construction employment was 231,000 higher in December 2022 than in December 2021.

“Despite sharp increases in interest rates over the past year, the shortage of construction workers will not disappear in the near future,” said ABC Chief Economist Anirban Basu. “First, while single-family home building activity has moderated, many contractors continue to experience substantial demand from a growing number of mega-projects associated with chip manufacturing plants, clean energy facilities and infrastructure. Second, too few younger workers are entering the skilled trades, meaning this is not only a construction labor shortage but also a skills shortage.

“With nearly 1 in 4 construction workers older than 55, retirements will continue to whittle away at the construction workforce,” said Basu. “Many of these older construction workers are also the most productive, refining their skills over time. The number of construction laborers, the most entry-level occupational title, has accounted for nearly 4 out of every 10 new construction workers since 2012. Meanwhile, the number of skilled workers has grown at a much slower pace or, in the case of certain occupations like carpenter, declined....

In 2024, the industry will need to bring in more than 342,000 new workers on top of normal hiring to meet industry demand, and that’s presuming that construction spending growth slows significantly next year.

Finally, the New York Times noted (in connection with a child-labor article referenced below) that,

A 2022 study led by a researcher at Washington State University found that many adult workers would be willing to take meatpacking jobs if they paid slightly better, around $2.85 more an hour.

We received evidence and met with representatives of various Florida industries (agriculture, hospitality, trucking/transportation, and construction) both large and small and asked these questions. What emerged was a consistent pattern of answers: (a) none of them want to employ anyone illegally; (b) “labor shortages” have been a concern for years, long before Florida’s SB1718 was passed; and (c) there is nothing about the new statute which has had a long-term impact on the ability to hire legal employees; at most there were anecdotal accounts of individuals who were leaving the state because they were illegal and now could not work, taking one or more legal family members with them.²⁶

In short, they generally corroborated the national reporting consensus that market difficulties have been going on more broadly and far longer than Florida's law and are the result of a number of factors. Difficulties which have been present in the market remain, but those predate Florida's legislative efforts in this regard.

We further note that the same sorts of "doomsday claims" were made some two decades ago when the federal government first passed its "e-verify" laws; the markets experienced short-term decreases in illegal employment, and adjusted. This fear-mongering about Florida's law appears to be devoid of factual support and indeed supposed hazards like "wholesale abandonment of construction sites" and "trucker boycotts" have failed to materialize.

We think Florida was correct to make it more difficult to illegally employ those who are not lawfully present here, because we have received much evidence that those workers are often targets of exploitation and artificially-low wages;²⁷ they are afraid to complain about such treatment, and some are working to pay cartels or as a consequence of human trafficking. If Florida is less attractive to illegally present persons, that is not a flaw of the legislation. Less exploitation of vulnerable people is an unqualified good.

Florida Highway Patrol (FHP) has continued to focus on disrupting the human smuggling on our highways, including an arrest in August of an individual who along with several of his passengers was illegally present, had been previously deported, and had a small child in the vehicle being operated by an unlicensed driver. This is precisely the sort of case the law was intended to address-- as might be also the case for the persons "reticketed" in June to our state by the City of New York with the assistance of an NGO, if any of those individuals "entered the United States in violation of law and has not been inspected by the Federal Government since his or her unlawful entry.” The previously-deported driver is also a textbook case for the imposition of a sentence enhancement such as we suggested above.

²⁶ A recent report from New York City disclosed that despite approximately 140,000 foreign nationals being brought to that city, only about 2% of them applied for work permits.

We also note that the President of Mexico and one of his diplomats here in Florida apparently expressed that those, including us, who favored the adoption and enforcement of this law did so for unwholesome reasons. We note hundreds of thousands of Mexican citizens leave that country every year (57,000 of them via CBP-One alone in the past fiscal year), many of them bound for Florida. There is also the matter of the raging war between armed criminal cartels controlling entire sections of that country. Perhaps Mexico should prioritize order and safety within its borders over concern with Florida state statutes.

We do support expansion of available worker visa programs (H2A and H2B). Florida employers hired 50,973 H2A (agricultural) workers last year and could use more. However, thanks to a local Florida expert, we also learned that H2B (non-agricultural) visas in particular represent a steep cost to employers, as the rules affiliated with those federal programs not only cap the number of potential employees, but require that if one is hired, existing employees must all be paid at least as much as the skilled worker at the top of the prevailing wage scale—not only must the employer pay the visa worker more, he must also pay existing employees that same wage. Moreover, keeping up with the changes and requirements for worker pay, housing, and eligibility seem to us to almost mandate the hiring of someone to manage such a program on a full-time basis. The costs of such programs thus go far beyond the individual wages paid.

VII. EMPLOYMENT, ID, INSURANCE, AND TAX FRAUD,
INCLUDING CHILD LABOR CRIMES

There are, unfortunately, those who do unlawfully employ people from other countries, and even industry representatives we spoke with candidly acknowledged this. Most often, this fraud is conducted in tandem with other crimes—identity theft, forgery, and tax fraud among them. We applaud our legislature for acting to strengthen the verification requirements in the last session, and suggest they may want to do so again to address certain symptoms of illegal activity by illegal aliens and employers, including elimination of some loopholes we have noted.

The Social Security Act requires noncitizens to be lawfully present to receive benefit payments while in the United States [Social Security Act, §202(y); 42 U.S.C. §402(y)]. Illegal aliens are not eligible for these benefits. The Social Security Administration (SSA) sometimes finds employees whose W-2 wage and tax statements have names and Social Security numbers that do not match SSA records. Many times, this is because there was some fraudulent activity such as a worker using a fake Social Security number or a deceased person's Social Security number. When that happens, the earnings reports (not tax money itself) are funneled to the “Earnings Suspense File.”

The total in the file has exceeded $2 trillion as of 2022. This figure represents a massive increase over the past decade (and twenty years ago, it was less than $200,000,000). In fact, in 2002, MSNBC reported that,

With every paycheck, U.S. workers pay FICA taxes, destined for Social Security funds. But each year, millions of payments are made to the agency with mismatched names and numbers. The Social Security Administration has no idea who deserves credit for the taxes paid by those wage earnings -- so no one gets it.

During 2002, the year with the most recent figures available, 9 million people paid taxes with mismatched names and Social Security Numbers. ... [M]ost - between 50 and 80 percent depending on whom you talk to -- represent illegal immigrants using a stolen or manufactured Social Security number at the workplace...

MSNBC.com research and government reports suggest hundreds of thousands of American citizens are in the same spot -- unknowingly lending their identity to illegal immigrants so they can work. And while several government agencies and private corporations sometimes know whose Social Security numbers are being ripped off, they won't notify the victims. That is, until they come after the victims for back taxes or unpaid loans owed by the imposter.

The problem is compounded by how often ripped-off numbers are used. James Lee, chief marketing officer for private data collection firm ChoicePoint, said the average victim of immigrant-based identity theft sees their Social Security number shared about 30 times. "The numbers get passed around a family, and around neighborhoods," he said.

The pattern and amounts have accelerated in the years since. In a 2014 interview, Social Security Administration Chief Actuary Stephen Goss explained the use of the ESF to CNN:

[absent] undocumented immigrants paying into the system, Social Security would have entered persistent shortfall of tax revenue to cover payouts starting in 2009.

According to one estimate, the federal government collects about $22 billion annually in employment tax receipts from illegal aliens who obviously do not withdraw it later from Social Security. However, this "funding boost" comes at a significant cost to some: Federal agencies have found well over 1 million cases of aliens using Social Security numbers belonging to someone else – i.e. stolen or "shared" with a relative or acquaintance – or numbers that are fabricated.

This can be done by simply making up a number, using the numbers of children born in the U.S., or, as a Real Clear Investigations report pointed out,

Others steal them directly from individuals, purchase them from dealers for $80 to $200 along with a green card as can be done in Los Angeles, or via the dark web for as little as $4...

While some illegal immigrants work off the books, the Social Security Administration has previously said that 75% are using fake or stolen numbers. By doing so, they gain access to broader employment opportunities. There is another powerful incentive for paying taxes as well. By dint of their generally low income levels, illegals can receive reimbursements through making use of deductions and exemptions, as well as rebates via refundable credits – leaving many with tax liabilities of zero or even as net recipients of government largesse. Immigration proponents contend that many do so in the hope that paying their taxes through employer withholding will weigh in their favor in a future amnesty, reflecting good behavior.

In the meantime, though, real people suffer real consequences of this identity theft; tax liens, ineligibility for home or business loans, loss of job opportunities, and other indignities. No one should be victimized because someone else wants to work illegally.

Other government agencies have found similar disturbing impacts. In 2018, the Department of Treasury inspector general found 1.3 million cases of employment-related identity theft in a five-year period ending in 2016; they also found 1.2 million cases in which illegal aliens used someone else's Social Security numbers in 2017 alone. In 2020, the GAO found more than 2.9 million Social Security numbers had "risk characteristics associated with SSN misuse."

The SSA used to at least notify employers of such discrepancies by letter; they could then notify law enforcement and have them possibly notify victims. But as the National Law Review documented:

No-Match letters are notifications that an individual employee's W-2 form does not match SSA's records. ... Receipt of a No-Match letter does not by itself mean the employee was working illegally or using a fraudulent Social Security card. Mismatches might be due to administrative errors, misspelled names, reversed numbers, or name changes (such as due to marriage). Nonetheless, employers, upon receipt of the EDCOR No-Match notification, were expected to take the appropriate actions – checking for errors in records and notifying the employee to resolve the issue with SSA. Employers were advised not to take adverse employment action against "noticed" employees solely due to a No-Match letter.

But in another policy move, the current administration has ordered the use of these letters discontinued.

We think our elected officials should again consider strong legislative mandates regarding universal documentation requirements, and notification to potential employers and victims of these crimes. A recently-concluded federal prosecution in the Southern District of Florida highlights other reasons why:

The operators of several Key West, Florida, labor staffing companies, ... were sentenced to prison today for tax and immigration-related crimes.

Defendants helped run a series of labor staffing companies that facilitated the employment of non-resident aliens in hotels, bars and restaurants in Key West and elsewhere who were not authorized to work in the United States. These labor staffing companies did not withhold federal income and Social Security and Medicare taxes from workers' wages and did not report said wages to the IRS.

These individuals were charged with having "entered into written contracts and verbal agreements with hotels, bars, and restaurants in Key West and elsewhere . . . when in fact many of the customers knew or had reason to believe that the workers provided under these agreements were not authorized to work in the United States... facilitated the employment of more than 100 alien workers," and for conspiring to harbor aliens and induce them to remain in the United States and filing a false federal tax return with the IRS.

Florida's licensing regime for General Licensed Contractors should also be addressed. Currently, our evidence suggests that significant loopholes are present whereby licensing requirements can be sidestepped. These include contractors who simply pass all liability for verification of employee eligibility to work to a third party, usually a subcontractor or labor staffing agency—there are "subs of subs of subs" on some projects. While we recognize a need for flexibility in industrial hiring, it does no good to have a licensing regime which can be so easily manipulated.

Accordingly, we recommend that our lawmakers assess the feasibility of either requiring general contractors to ultimately be fully and directly legally responsible for ensuring their subcontractors hire only legal workers, or requiring any employee staffing agency or any person or business which provides employees to work for another, to register with the state's Department of Labor and be bound by Florida's new e-verify requirements. We also suggest that the "25-employee exemption" to e-verify requirements be eliminated, as it provides too many incentives for the unscrupulous to "game the system."

As a state with many available jobs in the agriculture and construction industries, Florida is a particularly attractive destination for those from poorer nations seeking such work. We learned of the widespread use of persons with no U.S. status in insurance fraud schemes in Florida. The most common such scenario involves fraudsters who secure worker's compensation policies by either grossly underreporting the number of employees needing coverage, or mischaracterizing their job classification.

In these instances, parallel harms are occurring. First, the insurance company loses millions of dollars annually in lost premiums, a cost which ultimately is passed along to consumers. Additionally, the conductors of such fraud shamelessly exploit the non-status workers, secure in the knowledge they have a virtually non-existent financial bargaining position and are extremely unlikely to serve as prosecution witnesses in the event a criminal investigation yields arrests. Further, in an often overlooked but significant humanitarian consideration, these laborers are exposed to the physical dangers inherent in their workplaces without the guaranteed benefit of worker's compensation benefits.

Another disturbing facet of fraud in the immigration-employment context is referenced in our Third and Fourth Presentments, and highlighted recently by a series of articles in the New York Times (including "The Kids on the Night Shift"). A worrisome number of those working illegally²⁸ are children, using fake or stolen identities, who are sending funds to pay off smugglers and cartel members on behalf of themselves or their families. Many of these children are working in hazardous environments, without adequate protection, resulting in serious injury, disfigurement, chemical burns and poisoning, disease and inability to stay awake or attend school. We reviewed accounts of children working jobs that were supposedly "strictly off limits": construction, chemical cleaning, or labor in slaughterhouses.

In a typical example, these articles disclosed that:

[His] parents decided he would go north and find a way to earn money. They borrowed against their land to pay a coyote — technically a human smuggler, but in this case, more like a travel agent — to help him reach the United States without being kidnapped or hurt. He made his way to an adult cousin Federal law bans minors from cleaning slaughterhouses because of the risk of injury. But with the help of a middle-school classmate who already worked at the plant, [the child] bought fake documents that said he was a man with a different name in his 20s. When he was hired, children made up as much as a third of the overnight cleaning crew[.]...

[ORR provided] a list of requirements for sponsors. The first was to provide ... food and shelter. Another was to send him to school. Nearly last on the list was a pledge that he wouldn't work. [The ORR-vetted sponsor—not the child's parent] agreed to them all, but she had no intention of keeping [the child] from working. She knew that was why he had come... [The child] borrowed $800 from [the sponsor] to buy fake papers from a man in a nearby trailer, and at 13 he was hired onto the overnight sanitation shift. Each morning, [the sponsor] picked him up from the plant at 6:30, and 20 minutes later, he was waiting...for the school bus.

²⁸ The large majority of UAC in our state are between the ages of 15-17. We are concerned that proposed legislation such as HB49 in the current legislative session removes restrictions on the time, length, and hours children ages 16-17 are allowed to work. Specifically, we worry that this change might make it easier for those children, especially UAC, to be exploited.

But as more children come to the United States to help their families, more are ending up ... [with] brutal consequences. A Guatemalan eighth grader was killed on the cleaning shift at a Mar-Jac plant in Mississippi in July; a federal investigation had found migrant children working illegally at the company a few years earlier. A 14-year-old was hospitalized in Alabama after being overworked at a chicken operation there. A 17-year-old in Ohio had his leg torn off at the knee while cleaning a Case Farms plant. Another child lost a hand in a meat grinder at a Michigan operation....

His aunt had come from Guatemala a month earlier with her 15-year-old daughter... His aunt had planned to work while [the daughter] went to school, but they suffered a series of setbacks on their journey. Kidnappers held them hostage in Mexico and forced them to borrow from relatives to buy their freedom. They were turned back at the border and decided to cross through the desert, but his aunt fell from the border wall, shattering her leg and running up $107,000 in debt to an El Paso hospital. Now she was sleeping in the kitchen and using a walker, and instead of enrolling in ninth grade, [the child] was looking for a job.

The Times reported, and our investigations also showed, that the relevant agencies were well aware of these problems, but did little or nothing other than punish those who made the information public:

Even as veteran employees left, others kept sounding alarms. In January, shortly before the Times investigation was published, a group of workers sent another memo to their H.H.S. bosses saying the system had resulted in unsafe discharges. "We are pulling humanity out of 'Health and Human Services,'" they wrote.

Some of the most persistent warnings that children were being funneled into dangerous jobs came from outside the government. H.H.S. releases most children to sponsors without follow-up care, but it hires organizations to provide thousands of the most high-risk children with several months of support services. ...[One wrote to H.H.S. that] “We have identified some troubling trends in the Chicago metro area,” he wrote, including vans picking up children at odd hours, suggesting that they were being driven to factory jobs....

An H.H.S. staff member replied that more than 200 children, most of them Guatemalan, had recently been released to the neighborhood and confirmed that many of those cases had been marked as suspicious: Adults were sponsoring multiple children, and minors were working instead of attending school. “There are certainly plenty of other concerning trafficking red flags,” the staff member wrote....

An H.H.S. spokeswoman said the department was aware that some migrant children worked long hours because they are under intense pressure to earn money, but the agency’s legal responsibility for children ends once they are released. ...For now, most children released to sponsors have little support aside from an H.H.S. hotline. According to internal documents obtained by The Times, reports of trafficking to that hotline increased by about 1,300 percent over the past five years.

This included a 14-year-old child from Florida who related that he was working long shifts in a refrigerated warehouse, packing vegetables for distribution around the country, and had not seen his sponsor in months. . .He missed his grandmother and sometimes went days without talking to anyone. He wanted to go to school, but felt trapped because he needed to earn money to repay his debts[.]

The principal author of those articles indicated in an interview that:

So, like you say, I spent a year looking into migrant child labor in this country. And we found kids working in all 50 states. These are sometimes 12-, 13-year-olds. ...And it turns out, there were people in the administration, some of them in senior roles, who were trying to raise this. So the administration was told about people out in the field who were coming across children who said that they were being forced to work. And then people at the highest levels of the administration, people in the White House were told about clusters of children working in meatpacking factories, working in car plants, all around the country. And they were also told that there were these staffers out in the field or in the D.C. headquarters who were trying to send up a warning about this.

But, somehow, this still got missed. So these warnings were maybe ignored.

... And when I have gone back and asked the whistle-blowers at the agencies, well, why didn't they put them together, what these staffers say is, we think they just didn't want to know.

This crisis is the result of policy failures on multiple levels. And part of it has to do with labor enforcement. ...

And then, on the other side, this is a child welfare and immigration issue. And one thing that people point to in this country is, no single agency is really responsible for these children after they're released to sponsors.

So they're released. And then most of them are really on their own. And that's part of how we have ended up in this situation.

These are the policies.

Children Entering the United States Unaccompanied: Section 2 Safe and Timely Release from ORR Care

Published: January 30, 2015

Category: Unaccompanied Children (U-AC) Services

2.1 Summary of the Safe and Timely Release Process

The Office of Refugee Resettlement (ORR) has policies and procedures in place to ensure the care and safety of children who are apprehended in the United States without a parent or legal guardian available to provide care and custody and without immigration status. These policies require the timely release of children and youth to qualified parents, guardians, relatives or other adults, referred to as "sponsors." Safe and timely release must occur within a setting that promotes public safety and ensures that sponsors are able to provide for the physical and mental well-being of children.

ORR evaluates potential sponsors' ability to provide for the child's physical and mental well-being, as the law requires ORR to protect children from smugglers, traffickers, or others who might seek to victimize or otherwise engage the child in criminal, harmful or exploitative activity. The process for the safe and timely release of an unaccompanied alien child from ORR custody involves many steps, including: the identification of sponsors; the submission by a sponsor of the application for release and supporting documentation; the evaluation of the suitability of the sponsor, including verification of the sponsor's identity and relationship to the child; background checks; and in some cases home studies, and planning for post-release.

2.2 Application for the Safe and Timely Release of an Unaccompanied Alien Child from ORR Care

ORR begins the process of finding family members and others who may be qualified to care for an unaccompanied alien child as soon as the child enters ORR's care. Parents, other relatives, or close family friends can apply to have the child released to their care.

Posted: 1/27/15

2.2.1 Identification of Qualified Sponsors

The care provider (<https://www.acf.hhs.gov/programs/orr/resource/children-entering-the-united-states-unaccompanied-guide-to-terminals/Care-Provider>), the ORR funded facility that cares for the child, interviews the child as well as parents (see the section below on how ORR confirms relationship with child), legal guardians, and/or family members to identify qualified custodians ("sponsors"). If a child is either too young or there are other factors that prohibit the care provider from obtaining potential sponsor information from the unaccompanied alien child, the care provider may seek assistance from the child's home country consulate in collaboration with the ORR Federal Field Specialist (ORR/FFS) (<https://www.acf.hhs.gov/programs/orr/resource/children-entering-the-united-states-unaccompanied-guide-to-terminals/ORR-Federal-Field-Specialist>) or from a reputable family tracing organization. Finding a sponsor for the child is an ongoing process that continues during the unaccompanied alien child's stay in ORR care and custody in the event that the primary potential sponsor or primary release plan is not approved.

ORR releases children to a sponsor in the following order of preference: parent, legal guardian, an adult relative (brother, sister, aunt, uncle, grandparent or first cousin), an adult individual or entity designated by the parent or legal guardian (through a signed declaration or other document that ORR determines is sufficient to establish the signatory's parental/guardian relationship), a licensed program willing to accept legal custody, or an adult individual or entity seeking custody when it appears that there is no other likely alternative to long term ORR care and custody. ORR has grouped these release options into the following categories:

- Category 1: Parent or legal guardian (This includes qualifying step-parents that have legal or joint custody of the child or teen)
- Category 2: An immediate relative--a brother, sister, aunt, uncle, grandparent or first cousin (This includes biological relatives, relatives through legal marriage, and half-siblings)
- Category 3: Other sponsor, such as distant relatives and unrelated adult individuals
- Category 4: No sponsors identified

Although ORR gives preference to a parent or legal guardian when determining release plans, there are instances when ORR would not release an unaccompanied alien child to a parent or legal guardian. These include:

VIII. WHO BENEFITS

This brings us to another subject: with the amount of TCO/cartel activity we have documented, and the amount of murder, mayhem, narcotics and human trafficking, debt bondage, and immigration crimes for which they are responsible, how do the proceeds of such activity return to the cartels? Bulk cash smuggling is one method, but another is more insidious: money laundering in the form of “remittances.”

Every expert we consulted, when asked how a state such as Florida could assist in combatting organizations like TCOs, included the same recommendation:

“They don’t care about the people, about you, about life, or anything—except money. Go after the money.”

A. MECHANICS

Remittances are, generally, noncommercial transactions whereby persons who are living in a country other than where they were born send money “home” to friends, family, or other individuals. According to the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, they constitute “most electronic money transfers from people in the United States who send electronic transfers of more than $15 through a ‘remittance transfer provider.’” This provider can be a bank, a credit union, a “money transfer” business such as Western Union, or smaller providers of such services. In Florida, they must be licensed as such.

A report produced for the 118th Congress by the Congressional Research Service provided this helpful information:

The United States is the destination for the most international migrants and, according to the International Monetary Fund and World Bank, the largest global source of remittances, sending $72.7 billion in 2021. As remittances have grown, banks, traditional money transfer companies, and entrepreneurs have responded to increased demand by increasing the remittance channels available to migrants; these now include mobile, internet, and card-based options.

The United States has more immigrants than any other country in the world: immigrants account for 14.1% of the U.S. population and are the largest global source of remittances. Remittance transactions typically involve a sender from one country, a recipient in another country, financial intermediaries in both countries, and a payment system used by the intermediaries. The financial institutions involved in the $540 billion remittances market can be banks or credit unions, but they are often money transmitters, such as MoneyGram, Western Union, or PayPal.

Formal channels²⁹ involve intermediaries that are officially licensed to operate money-transfer businesses. These formal channels consist of banks, nonbank financial institutions (including post offices), and money service businesses such as Western Union or MoneyGram. Increased use of technology in developing countries has also facilitated the use of mobile-phone-based and other electronic payment methods (such as PayPal), through both formal and informal mechanisms.

The U.S. foreign remittance market is dominated by MSBs, a category of nonbank financial institutions that generally own proprietary, so-called “closed-loop” payment systems, and operate largely outside of conventional banks. A reason remittance customers may use MSBs is that the customers are often “unbanked”; that is, they do not have an account with a depository financial institution. MSBs issue money orders and traveler’s checks, transmit money, cash checks, exchange currency, and store value.

Although some prominent companies, such as Western Union, MoneyGram, and PayPal, belong to this group of financial institutions, thousands of money transmitters in the United States operate in the background of financial services. Traditional money transmitters like Western Union and MoneyGram are often located in a wide variety of other businesses, including supermarkets, check cashing agents, gas stations, liquor stores, convenience stores, and currency exchange offices. Alternatively, many peer-to-peer (P2P) platforms, such as PayPal and Venmo, operate through mobile apps and web

²⁹ Thanks to expert testimony we are familiar with alternative transfer systems, including “trade-based money laundering,” bulk cash smuggling, and cryptocurrency; we focus on “formal” remittance systems. People can send remittances through informal or formal channels. The most well-known informal channel is hawala (hawala means “transfer” in Arabic), which originated in India and has been in use in South Asia and the Middle East for several hundred years ... these systems’ lack of documentation and their anonymity and informality can make them attractive for money laundering, terrorist financing, or other illegal purposes. But they are not subject to ready inspection and are difficult to regulate.

browsers, and so are not ancillary to another business sharing a physical location.

According to the World Bank the United States is consistently the largest sending jurisdiction, accounting for 26% of all remittances sent in 2021. Mexico is by far the largest recipient of remittances from the United States, receiving over $50 Billion in 2021.

Money transfer is accompanied by a processing fee. The World Bank also tracks the cost of sending remittances from the main remittance service providers, be they traditional MTOs (Money Transfer Operators, such as Western Union and Moneygram) and digital mobile operators and MTOs such as Transferwise (Wise), Remitly, WorldRemit, InstaReM and Xoom. In Q3 2022, the World Bank's International MTO Index recorded a decrease to 5.93% from the previous value of 6.17% in Q2 2022. The cost of digital remittances, on the other hand, has increased in recent years. In Q3 2022, the World Bank's digital-only MTO Index was recorded at 4.38%.

B. STRUCTURAL WARNING SIGNALS

In January 2023, FinCen reported that,

Migrants generally pay smugglers in one of three ways: 1) payment in advance, in which the migrant or the migrant's relatives provide full payment to the smuggler before traveling; 2) partial payment, in which a migrant pays some portion upon departure and the remaining balance is paid in full upon arrival, and 3) payment on arrival, in which the migrant's relatives pay the full fee to the smuggler after the migrant is successfully smuggled. ... migrants who cannot afford full payment, are unable to pay any outstanding debt upon arrival in the United States or do not voluntarily enter into work agreements may be vulnerable to human trafficking, to include commercial sex trafficking, forced labor, fraud, kidnapping, and other forms of exploitation, once within the United States.

Funnel Accounts: Funnel accounts generally involve an individual or business account in one geographic area that receives multiple cash deposits, often in amounts below the cash reporting threshold, from which the funds are withdrawn in a different geographic area with little time elapsing between the deposits and withdrawals.

Smuggling fees, often paid by the family members of migrants already settled in the United States and disguised as remittances, are sent to funnel accounts at financial institutions with branches or locations along both sides of the SW border. Smuggling networks may seek to establish accounts with financial institutions with a large U.S. presence to allow for easy collection of payments from the families of those being smuggled and who may be located throughout the United States. In addition to payment via cash, human smugglers also use mobile payment applications and other forms of peer-to-peer (P2P) networks to transfer funds. For example, smugglers may use P2P networks to collect payments from migrants to cover the expenses necessary for their travel from the country of origin to their final destination.

Financial Red Flag Indicators of Human Smuggling:

FinCEN has identified the following financial red flag indicators to assist financial institutions in detecting, preventing, and reporting suspicious transactions associated with human smuggling.

- Transactions involving multiple wire transfers, cash deposits, or P2P payments from multiple originators from different geographic locations either across (1) the United States, or (2) Mexico and Central America, to one beneficiary located on or around the SW border, with no apparent business purpose.
- Deposits made by multiple individuals in multiple locations into a single account, not affiliated with the account holder's area of residence or work, with no apparent business purpose...
- Multiple customers sending wire transfers to the same beneficiary (who is not a relative, and may be located in the sender's home country), inconsistent with the customer's usual business activity and reported occupation.

As it relates to Mexico in particular, the Remittance Industry Observatory published a report in 2017 indicating that not only was the total remittance amount rising, but the average amount sent during each transaction had been steady over a four-year period at around $300. In Florida, it was $360. In 2017, RIO estimated that just under 250,000 such transfers occurred in Florida, and the total from the U.S. to Mexico was just under $30 billion. In the six years since, that number has nearly doubled.

The Dialogue: Leadership for the Americas compiled data on remittance transfers in 2022. They found:

- Total sent from the U.S. was $150 billion
 - At least 26 million senders and 40 million transactions
 - Annual 14 percent growth
 - 80% of the total remittance flow to Latin America came from the U.S., up from 75% the year before
 - Approximately 30% of the transfers were digital

And, most significantly for our purpose here, the Gross Domestic Product of some nations had a significant component from these very transfers:

El Salvador	26.7%
Guatemala	20.0%
Haiti	15.9%
Honduras	28.8%
Jamaica	25.6%
Nicaragua	22.2%
Mexico	4.6%*

Mexico's GDP is much larger than all the others combined.

Given these figures and the amount of money they represent, it is no wonder some governments are assisting portions of their populations to undertake the horrific journey we have described; the return monies are literally keeping their economies afloat in many cases.

In the case of Mexico, the Mexico Institute and Mexico News Daily both reported that,

Around 7.5% of the more than US $58 billion in remittances sent to Mexico last year could be linked to drug trafficking, according to a Mexican think tank. Central bank data shows that Mexicans living and working abroad, mainly in the United States, sent a record $58.5 billion home last year.

The think tank Signos Vitales said in a report that there is evidence that at least $4.4 billion of that amount is ill-gotten gains that was sent electronically to Mexico as part of a money laundering process.

...Among the evidence cited by Signos Vitales is that large amounts of money were sent to Mexico from U.S. states with small Mexican populations and that monthly remittances to over 200 municipalities exceeded the number of households located in them.

The U.S. state from which the third highest amount in remittances emanated in 2022 — about 8% of the total — was Minnesota, which ranked behind only California and Texas despite having a Mexican population of just 200,000, or 0.5% of the total number of Mexican-origin residents in the United States. [It] also noted that the amount of money sent to Mexico from Minnesota increased 585% between 2018 and 2022.

“The most powerful reason to believe that it’s not Mexicans sending remittances from Minnesota is that the amount sent — some $4.7 billion — is equivalent to the gross annual income of all ... Mexicans [in the state], making it financially impossible,” the report said.

The combined increase in remittances in the same period from that state as well as Idaho, Maine, Montana, New Hampshire, North Dakota, Tennessee and Utah — all of which have relatively small Mexican populations — was just under 279%, Signos Vitales said.

The data-focused think tank also said that remittances originating from unknown locations increased 332.5% between 2018 and 2022.

In addition, it said that 227 municipalities received more remittances than households on a monthly basis last year. The number of monetary transfers received by 32 of those municipalities was at least two times higher than the number of households, Signos Vitales said.

The $4.4 billion figure calculated by Signos Vitales is in fact based solely on “those municipalities ... where 100% of the homes receive more than one [monetary] transfer per month,” Signos Vitales said.

“... It’s an introduction to the magnitude of the [money laundering] problem, which we believe is enormous,” the think tank added.

In its report, Signos Vitales also noted that the total monetary amount of remittances sent to Mexico has increased sharply in recent years. “There has to be an explanation for the astounding increase in the past few years. It’s impressive that it’s gone from around $21 billion [a decade ago] to nearly $60 billion,” said the think tank’s president Enrique Cárdenas, an economics professor.

The report also built on research from 2021 which found:

Organized crime groups in Mexico have shown a remarkable ability to adapt amid the global health crisis, and the record number of remittances sent back to the country from the United States presents a clear money laundering opportunity.

To be sure, Mexican criminal groups have long co-opted remittances sent through US banks for their own interests. In 2017, for example, the US Justice Department announced that Banamex USA’s (BUSA) anti-money laundering monitoring system “issued more than 18,000 alerts involving more than $142 million in potentially suspicious remittance transactions” sent between 2007 and 2012.

Organized crime groups often use such transfers to launder money and hide its illicit origins. Yet BUSA “conducted fewer than 10 investigations and filed only nine” Suspicious Activity Reports (SARs) during that time, and didn’t file a single report on suspicious remittance transactions between 2010 and 2012, according to US prosecutors. ... Remittances will remain a key money laundering tool for Mexican crime groups so long as US banks struggle to step up controls.

Finally, we received evidence regarding a remarkable study conducted at the Universidad de la Salle Bajío Campus Salamanca Correo in Mexico. It found:

In 2021, remittances reached a record level of more than 52.7 billion USD, 25% more than a year before but 215% in comparison with 2014. That means, that remittances doubled in seven years which is a remarkable accomplishment....

In the face of this conundrum, we want to inquire whether there is enough evidence to correlate the boom in Mexico’s remittances with Mexican TCO and the outbreak of the drug overdose death crisis in the United States up 2015.

Most of illegal fentanyl consumed in the US is produced in clandestine labs in Mexico. Fentanyl is 50 times more potent than heroin, rather cheap, easy to get and is classified as a synthetic drug because it is made of chemicals.

Figure 1 plots the trajectory of murders related to organized crime in Mexico, remittances, and drug overdose deaths in the USA. We can notice that the three variables seem to move harmoniously taking off very quickly up 2015. Drug overdose deaths and remittances behave similarly, whereas violent murders in Mexico have also augmented but more irregularly and with an important backlash in 2021; they have stabilized at around 35,000 murders a year on average.

Table 3 displays the top seven Mexican states in violent murders and their share in remittances from 2003 to 2020. The high level of violence in terms of murders by the seven states have a strong presence of Cartel Jalisco Nueva Generación (CJNG) and harbor clandestine labs to produce synthetic drugs.

The fact that these states accounted for 41.46% of violent murders between 2003 and 2020 and at the same time they also received 48.28% of remittances in the same period, awake the suspicion that this foreign currency could be camouflaging revenues from drug trafficking.

We took quarterly data published by Data Center for Disease Control (Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, 2022) from QI-2015 to QIII-2021 and found significant correlations between drug overdose deaths vs remittances. ... As can be seen from table 4, the seven Mexican States receiving 2/5 of remittances show a positive significant correlation with drug overdose deaths in borderlands,

Thus, we can sustain the hypothesis that Mexico's spike in remittances is not correlated with historical low rates of unemployment and this boom in remittances coincides with higher prices of synthetic drugs and larger numbers of drug overdose deaths. The same pattern with slight differences can be observed by Texas (figure 5) and New Mexico (figure 6) respectively.

This could either be the result of more migrants working in the USA or of higher revenues obtained by Mexican TCO at higher prices of their drugs derived from the lockdowns and freezing of economic activity during the Covid-19 pandemic. This conclusion represents only an approach to a complex and dynamic phenomenon, and it is based on public data.

C. TCOs AND THEIR CUTS

We have already established that Florida is home to a large immigrant population, including a large illegal population. And just as some of our citizens are criminals who work with or in fear of gangs and TCOs, so too are some aliens. Regardless of status, though, a great many incur substantial debt to TCOs in the process of reaching our state. That debt does not disappear just because they arrive. Cartels and their gang affiliates also make large sums of money in this country through various activities; they look for ways to get it back to their “home turf.”

One method becoming more popular, it seems, is via co-opting of the remittance process. We have previously referenced an FDLE investigation of financial information we subpoenaed from a number of Florida institutions documenting financial transactions from within Florida to specific locations in countries through which migration is occurring. That investigation has turned up disturbing evidence of multiple cases of each of the FinCen “Red Flags” described above.

Most disgustingly, TCO control of remittances is exercised upon the most vulnerable population: Unaccompanied Alien Children. This is done by simple extortion: parents borrow money from these criminals to send their children to the United States where, instead of being placed with a vetted sponsor who makes sure they are safe and sound, they are abandoned thousands of dollars in debt to groups who can have their parents harmed or killed, or seize their home. Their “sponsor” lets them work under false identification, in hazardous jobs with great risk of harm, and unscrupulous MTOs allow them to cash their paychecks (often issued under someone else’s name) and send cash to their parents, who immediately turn that money over to the TCO—all courtesy of ORR and other federal agencies’ lax policies.

The New York Times’ “Night Shift” story described the situation thusly:

The store is more than just a place to wire money. [T]he woman at the cash register, ... had helped the ninth grader’s brother apply to be her sponsor. Now she noticed that the girl had the white payroll debit card used by the sanitation companies. The companies deposited a week’s pay each Friday, and workers usually withdrew it all in cash the following day. The girl [said] with pride that she had gotten a job.

[The woman] sympathized with children who worked nights *but thought their sponsors were akin to traffickers.*³⁰ ...Another girl came in with a white payroll card. She finished [her] shift a few hours earlier and still had a headache from the night's chemicals. [The woman] counted out $500 for her and gave her a discount on a bag of ice pops. "Take care of yourself," she said...

Technically, minors are not supposed to send wire transfers, and [the woman] was supposed to check their IDs. But when she tried to enforce the rule, customers complained. "They just have fake papers anyway," she said. The store got more crowded in the afternoon. A boy with the beginnings of a mustache withdrew his $500 and bought a bottle of nonalcoholic wine. A teenager who had recently dropped out of 10th grade so he could switch to the day shift sent $150 to his mother.

Another child came in, a slight 15-year-old who had played on the soccer team ... but dropped out after spring break to work during the day. He was too short to rest his elbows on the counter. "Is your uncle not letting you go to school?" she asked as he ran his payroll card.

"They don't let me," he said... Sometimes, she wanted to interrogate the children who came in with payroll cards, but she also knew that would be bad for business. There was another store with a card reader a few miles up the highway. She handed the boy $500 and then helped him send money to his mother.

What we propose may at least throw some sand in the gears of this practice—and if anything can be done to avoid even one child being permitted to perpetuate this cycle of exploitation and self-harm, we believe it should.

A case from the nearby State of Georgia sets out another facet of the enterprise:

Multiple guilty pleas expose ability of drug cartels to launder drug proceeds through money remitters.

Drug Cartels are constantly looking for conduits like money service businesses to launder their illicit drug proceeds back to Mexico. We work to dismantle drug organizations by cutting off the money flow back to Mexico, this makes it harder for the drug cartels to operate,” said James Dorsey, Acting Special Agent in Charge, Atlanta Field Office. ...

³⁰ We do not disagree, though we also would not describe her complicity as anything but criminal.

In 2014, federal law enforcement agents began investigating individuals in the metro-Atlanta area that were suspected of laundering drug proceeds to Mexico. Federal agents utilized cooperating sources to infiltrate these individuals’ networks and determined that the money launderers were frequently using small businesses to send drug proceeds to Mexico. These small businesses offered “money remittance services,” which allow customers to wire funds to individuals in other countries without using traditional bank accounts.

Investigators determined that managers and employees of a number of metro-Atlanta remitters were knowingly helping the money launderers send drug proceeds to Mexico. During the course of this investigation, cooperating sources and an undercover law enforcement officer brought drug proceeds or money that was represented as coming from drug sales to different remitters. In exchange for a kickback, managers and employees of nine different remitters agreed to launder the funds to Mexico by breaking the transactions into smaller amounts and by listing fake sender names, addresses, and telephone numbers. The investigation revealed that nine metro-Atlanta remitters transmitted more than $40 million over a roughly four-year timeframe. The resulting guilty pleas in this case made clear that the bulk of this money came from the sale of illegal narcotics.

Several of the defendants who pleaded guilty actually served as the Bank Secrecy Act/Anti-Money Laundering (“BSA/AML”) compliance officers for their respective stores and were responsible for detecting and reporting these types of illicit financial transactions. Instead, these defendants used their anti-money laundering training to help the drug proceeds flow to Mexico undetected.

The recorded undercover transactions that took place during the operation exposed how willing many remitters were to help their customers secretly send drug proceeds to Mexico. One defendant, who served as a store manager and BSA/AML compliance officer, even gave an undercover officer tips on where to sell drugs in Atlanta. Another defendant, who also served as a store manager and BSA/AML compliance officer, offered to provide a cooperating source help on obtaining fake identifications so that drug proceeds could be transmitted to Mexico undetected.

Reuters described the same phenomenon during our investigation:

A Mexican mother walked into a bank in her home city of Culiacán in the Mexican state of Sinaloa, where an $8,000 remittance from the United States was waiting. She withdrew the funds in local currency, then strolled across town and deposited nearly all of it into accounts at two different banks.

Money sent home by migrant workers is a lifeline for millions of Mexicans. But the woman had never met the person who wired her the funds, nor the owners of the accounts where she took the cash. What she did know: The deal had been carefully arranged by the Sinaloa Cartel, one of the world's largest drug trafficking groups, to repatriate profits from U.S. drug sales back to Mexico disguised as a routine remittance. Her cut: $230 worth of Mexican pesos.

It was the start of easy money for the woman, who said she previously had struggled to make ends meet cleaning houses. Recalling that day in April 2014 for Reuters, she estimated she had earned some $17,000 over the years recruiting others into the scheme and cashing remittances totaling hundreds of thousands of dollars – but never too much or too often, so as to avoid scrutiny by banking authorities. She said a neighbor got her into the game, and that she had never met her bosses in person. “Everything was by phone,” she said, “and the phone numbers changed every time.”

The woman showed Reuters WhatsApp messages on her phone that she said were from traffickers coordinating her remittance pickups and drop-offs. One from early 2022 said: “They are waiting for you outside. They know who you are. Give them the money.”

The Culiacán mother is part of an army of civilians recruited by the Sinaloa Cartel and other drug syndicates across Mexico to help move illicit drug profits earned in the United States south of the border. The criminal scheme essentially piggybacks on the vast legal network of money-transfer firms that help migrant laborers send money home to their families.

...As legitimate remittances have ballooned, it has become ever easier for cartels to disguise their ill-gotten gains in small transfers sent to average people across Mexico who have no obvious links to organized crime, according to four U.S. and Mexican security officials.

...Several features of the remittance sector make it an attractive vehicle through which criminal funds can enter the financial system, according to four industry executives and the Mexican and U.S. law enforcement officials. Chief among them is the worldwide reach of this network and the modest-sized cash transactions that drive it. Identification requirements for such transfers are more relaxed than those needed to set up a formal bank account or to wire significant sums of money.

Cases of crime groups using popular money-transfer services to conduct illegal activities have been documented before. Reuters interviewed two dozen Mexico residents who said they had been paid by the Sinaloa Cartel to act as conduits for remittances, turning the money over to cartel operatives after receiving it. Records from eight U.S. federal court cases and interviews with a dozen industry insiders, analysts and law enforcement agents on both sides of the border paint a detailed picture of how the criminal venture works.

The use of remittances to move drug money was supercharged by the COVID-19 pandemic after long-established travel routes were upended by closures and lockdowns, according to four security officials from the United States and Mexico. Between March 2020 and November 2021, the U.S.-Mexico border was closed to all but “essential” travel. That made the traditional method of repatriating drug profits – bulk smuggling of cash hidden in southbound cars, trucks and cargo trailers – much harder. Traffickers turned to other means, the security sources said, resulting in a heavier reliance on remittances. It’s an approach that has endured even as the public health emergency has receded, they said, because the networks the narcos established are effective. The Sinaloa Cartel and Jalisco New Generation Cartel are believed to be among the drug syndicates using remittances to repatriate drug proceeds, the person said.

There is a clear pattern for how money is laundered via remittances, according to the U.S. official who works on illicit finance, people who have participated in the scheme in Mexico, and federal court documents reviewed by Reuters from U.S. money laundering prosecutions.

In the United States, much of the remittance trade is conducted through corner stores, chain retailers and currency exchanges. These businesses sign on as agents with one or more of the money-transfer companies, for example Western Union, and display the familiar logos of these firms in their shops to entice customers. The retailers receive training from the money-transfer companies on how to use their technology platforms, spot fishy transactions and comply with U.S. anti-money laundering laws. Agents are paid a commission for each transaction they process. Customers can bring cash to these storefronts and send it abroad. Neither senders nor receivers are required to have a bank account.

This fragmented network is key to the functioning of the scheme, according to the people and documents. Although money-transfer companies have internal systems designed to spot and curtail illegal activity, controls largely rely on checks done face-to-face with customers at the shop level. Thus, protections are only as robust as the honesty and diligence of these mom-and-pop agents, some of whom are purportedly in league with drug traffickers, according to law enforcement sources and the eight federal court cases reviewed by Reuters that involved alleged laundering of drug money via money transfers.

The process of dividing large amounts of money into smaller transactions to avoid reporting requirements is commonly known as “smurfing” or “structuring.” Mobilizing large numbers of people or “smurfs” to send and receive those modest sums is referred to as “many to many” by U.S. law enforcement agents.

U.S.-based accomplices sending money south can earn kickbacks from the cartels as high as 10% of the value of individual transfers that rarely exceed $1,000, according to the U.S. official and a 2019 federal indictment of alleged criminals running an Ohio money laundering ring.

The average size remittance sent to Mexico in 2022 was $390, according to data from the country’s central bank. Those funds often are sent to Mexican merchants including convenience stores, supermarkets, pharmacies and department stores.

Two dozen Mexico-based smurfs who said they work for the Sinaloa Cartel told Reuters they prefer dealing with retailers because those businesses tend to ask fewer questions than banks do. They said they typically are required to show their official voter ID card; provide the name of the sender and their relationship to that person; and present a transaction tracking number that senders share only with recipients – details provided to them in advance by the cartel via texts or Whatsapp messages.

Receivers in Mexico typically keep 1% of the proceeds as compensation, the people said, with new recruits pocketing a larger share on their first transaction to entice them into the racket. Security officials said Mexican smurfs are paid less than their U.S. counterparts because the risk of arrest is lower. A Reuters search of Mexican court records dating back to 2012 turned up no cases involving money laundering through remittances.

In the United States, at least seven drug trafficking cases that involved the use of remittances to send profits to Mexico have been successfully prosecuted since 2017 in federal courts in Colorado, Georgia, Ohio, Oklahoma, Texas, Virginia and Washington state. Collectively, those cases involved the laundering of more than $100 million between 2013 and 2020, according to court documents filed by prosecutors. At least 81 individuals charged in those cases have pleaded guilty to crimes including conspiracy to commit money laundering and to distribute narcotics, and illegal possession of firearms.

...Sigue, for example, examined 375 transactions performed by Express Cellular from March to August of 2017 and found multiple indicators of “wire transfers related to narcotics trafficking,” the affidavit said. Among the warning signs noted in the document: Nearly two-thirds of the transactions were sent to the “high risk” Mexican state of Nayarit, a place renowned as a center of opium poppy cultivation. And many of the transactions were for amounts between $800 and $999, a range Sigue flagged as indicative of “narcotics proceeds.”

Barely 28,000 people live in the Sinaloan town of Costa Rica, located about 35 kilometers south of Culiacán, the state capital. It is an area of low migration to the United States, according to Mexican government data. Yet Costa Rica boasts a thriving financial cluster: Six branches of the country’s main banks are located there, as well as convenience stores, pharmacies and other retailers where residents can pick up remittances.

In a visit to the town last year, Reuters saw at least five people on motorcycles, wearing fanny packs and accompanied by bodyguards, collecting cash from people exiting branches of Banco Azteca, Banorte and BanCoppel located on the poorly paved main drag. Six locals told Reuters these couriers worked for the Sinaloa Cartel picking up drug money sent as remittances, without elaborating further.

Across Sinaloa, 49 people familiar with this activity – many of whom have participated themselves – told Reuters it's a common side hustle for residents. A mother from El Tepuche, a small rural town about 18 kilometers outside Culiacán, said she had been cashing remittances for the Sinaloa Cartel for four years. “I've done it, most of my family has done it,” she said. The woman said some of her relatives retrieve remittances for the cartel using a smartphone app from Albo, a Mexican fintech company.

...Mexico last year received the second highest amount of remittances globally, behind only India and surpassing China, according to the World Bank. Remittances last year accounted for 4.3% of Mexican GDP, nearly double the percentage from 2015, government data show. Almost 2 million Mexican households received remittances last year, according to Mexico's central bank.

...In the first nine months of last year, 227 Mexican municipalities received so many money transfers that every single household in those places could have received at least one remittance per month. “Statistically speaking, such phenomena are unlikely,” Signos Vitales said. Collectively, those places received $10.5 billion, or nearly 25% of all remittances sent to Mexico in the first three quarters of 2022. Oquitoa is a hamlet of around 500 people located in a region of Sonora state dominated by the Caborca Cartel. As recently as 2017, Oquitoa registered no remittances. Last year it received $2.5 million.

In Culiacán, the former house cleaner who began cashing remittances for the Sinaloa Cartel in 2014 said she had initially been nervous about getting involved with narcos, but did so “out of necessity.” She had recently returned with her daughter to Mexico from the United States and was struggling to live on her $150 monthly earnings when a neighbor suggested a way to make some easy money. Her initial cut of $230 went towards paying that month's rent. Soon, she was retrieving remittances regularly, but no more than three times a month, a limit imposed by the cartel. Sometimes, her handlers messaged that she must “take a break” for a few months, she said. The woman said she received about 1% of each remittance she cashed. But a good chunk of her total earnings – around $8,000 – came from bringing others into the ring. She said she was paid $40 a head for people she recruited herself, $20 for each person her enlistees brought in, followed by a final payout of $10 per person from the next layer of the pyramid. She said the work hasn't made her rich, but it has made life a little more comfortable. "We used the money to improve the house," she said.

One of her direct recruits was a Sinaloan truck driver in his 50s, who told Reuters he eventually brought his daughter in on the action. He said she and other younger recruits used Albo, a Mexican fintech, or mobile payments company, to receive money for the cartel. The daughter's activities cast light on how new banking technology offers traffickers fresh ways of laundering money, a trend confirmed by security experts and 13 smurfs who said they cash remittances for the Sinaloa Cartel. Some fintechs offer app-based services that wire money internationally in seconds, and provide users with a debit or credit card to make purchases with those funds.... The truck driver said his daughter cashed remittances for the Sinaloa Cartel for three years. Then, in June 2019, two unidentified men shot her dead.

"They shot my daughter, here in front of my house," he said. Reuters viewed a copy of her death certificate. It said she died of gunshot wounds. The man said he still cashes remittances for the Sinaloa Cartel. He's afraid they'll harm him if he stops.

The sort of activities our witnesses described to us are also corroborated in a lengthy article by VICE World News from April, 2021, abridged and reordered below. By the time we read it, it was no longer news to us, but it contains what we consider an excellent distillation of another problem we have studied and now confront: kidnapping, ransom, and extortion via remittance.

Don ... was trying to get back to his wife and two daughters in San Jose, California, where he'd lived for more than a decade before being deported back to Mexico.

With no legal way to reunite with his family, Don had agreed to pay the smugglers $12,000 to sneak him across the border and up to Los Angeles. But as the two men drove him through Tijuana, he overheard them talking and realized they had other plans.

“Did you bring the gun?”

“Yeah, in case they want to run.”

They passed a Mexican police patrol, but Don didn’t bother to scream—he assumed the cops were friendly with his captors, or perhaps even in on the kidnapping. As the SUV pulled up to a house, the men forced a hood over his head and tied up his feet and arms. He thought to himself, “This is it; I am never going to see my family again.”

In California, Don’s wife got a phone call. A man whose voice she didn’t recognize demanded she pay $10,000 through wire transfers for her husband’s release. She insisted on talking to Don. The kidnappers held the phone to his mouth.

“Get the money, please, get it,” he told her. “Ask my brothers. Find someone who will loan it to you. Help me.”

Don was kidnapped on January 13, 2014. In the years since, tens of thousands of other migrants have endured similar nightmares. ...At the heart of it are wire transfers through American companies, which are still by far the most common way for kidnappers to extort ransom payments and for coyotes to collect fees.

The kidnapper gave detailed instructions to Don’s wife, Maria. If she wanted to see her husband alive, she had to make four deposits of $2,500 each to four people in Tijuana. Maria scraped together all she and Don had, then turned to relatives for the rest. She drove to Tropicana Foods in San Jose, a market that sells everything from groceries to jewelry and clothes. At the checkout counter, customers can also send cash abroad using a number of money transfer companies. Maria chose Ria, a California-based company with nearly half a million locations in 159 countries, because it offered the best exchange rate.

Maria’s in-laws each deposited $2,500. Ria charged $25 per transfer. The payments were “structured” or broken up into smaller amounts in an effort to avoid triggering laws that require companies like Ria to keep detailed records of any transaction over $3,000 and monitor for suspicious behavior.

Even so, when Maria tried to send her portion, Ria’s system blocked it. Undeterred, she simply went to another Ria outlet a few miles away. This time, the transfer went through. For the $10,000 ransom payment, Ria earned $100 in fees....

Most family members of kidnap victims pay $2,000-$4,000 to free the loved one, according to receipts we reviewed and interviews with nearly a dozen victims. With few exceptions, the kidnappings are carried out by cartels or affiliated criminal groups. Like Maria, the victims usually enlist friends and relatives to help send the money to avoid being blocked. The initial extortion is often just the beginning. If kidnappers sense victims aren't bled dry, they demand more money. Such was the case with Maria and Don.

Hours after Maria sent the payments, the kidnappers called back and angrily reported that one of the $2,500 transactions was blocked on their end. Maria was able to retrieve that money, but the man told her she needed to come up with another $8,000 to make up for the loss or she'd never see Don again.

Don's mother had recently sold a house and split the money among her children. Those funds would now be used to pay off the kidnappers.

The kidnappers gave Maria a new list of four names and again instructed her to send the money in parts. She returned to Tropicana Foods and attempted to make the transfer, but this time the teller said the amount was too large.

In Tijuana, Don's nightmare was just beginning. He recalled being held alone, blindfolded and bound. He received only water, no food. The first guard kicked him, he said, and another took down Don's pants and touched his genitals.

"He would touch my parts and tell me that he was going to help me, that I needed to do what he said, because if I didn't, they were going to kill me," Don said. "I was practically like an animal," he added, wiping tears from his face. "It was like they were going to sacrifice me."

Don, ... had been deported previously trying to enter the U.S., and his 2013 removal came after a traffic stop led to police finding a weapon—a collector's item Japanese throwing star, or shuriken.

On the third day of his kidnapping, the man who liked to touch Don came into the room and announced: "Te vas a tomar dos Tonayans." He carried two bottles of Tonayan, a bottom-shelf brand of tequila that comes in a plastic jug. Don would be released, but first he had to drink.

With no other choice, Don began to down the tequila. He blacked out and woke up next to a highway. He was beaten and bloodied, his clothes dirty and stained. He begged for help, but passers-by kept their distance.

Don managed to get to a church in Tijuana. A man outside agreed to call Don's home, and Maria picked up. Over the previous three days, she had paid the kidnappers $14,500 for Don's release: $7,500 in money transfers, plus the additional $7,000 in cash, which her in-laws fearfully handed off at a park in East Los Angeles.

Maria arranged for a cousin to pick up Don. ... They found yet another coyote to smuggle him across near Calexico, California.

Two months after Don's kidnapping, Maria went to the police. ... She knew after delivering the second ransom payment that the criminals had connections in California, and she feared retaliation. She also knew of other people—family members of church friends—who'd been kidnapped while crossing the border.

"I was terrified," she said. "But my friends at the church said to me, 'You have to speak up so other people will also overcome their fear and denounce what's happening. Because if people don't say what happened, it remains a secret and nothing ever changes.'" ...

Two FBI agents arrived at Maria's house a few weeks later. She retold the story, again providing copies of all the records. Maria said she never heard from them again.

As soon as Don crossed into Arizona with his second coyote, immigration agents began pursuing the group, and eventually detained them. The federal authorities wanted to prosecute the smuggler, and Don agreed to cooperate as a witness in the case.

He also told them about the kidnapping, and after a year in detention, a judge ordered him released, ruling he had a "credible fear" of returning to Mexico. He and Maria are currently pursuing U-visas for undocumented immigrants who are victims of crime and cooperate with law enforcement. ...

Nothing ever came of the FBI investigation. In 2017, Don's attorney contacted the FBI agent who visited Maria. The agent said in an email that the case was closed because Don could not be reached for an interview while he was in ICE custody.

These days, Maria works in a Mexican restaurant, and Don has returned to the construction industry, laying tile in bathrooms and kitchens for $28 an hour, but the pandemic has made jobs scarce. They still owe money to their relatives who helped pay the $14,500 ransom.

Don and Maria still hold out hope the kidnappers will be caught and prosecuted, but they know the reality of that happening gets dimmer with every passing day. “That money will never be returned to me,” Don said. “But if there were justice in my case, so other families didn’t go through the same, that would be enough.”

There are no reliable statistics on migrant kidnappings. The Mexican government’s most recent report, from 2011, documented more than 11,000 in just six months. If that pace continued, it would work out to over 200,000 kidnappings in a decade. Assuming the kidnappers received around $2,000-$4,000 per victim, the going rate in the receipts we reviewed, that works out to $40 million–$80 million annually paid out in ransoms. The true total is impossible to pin down, since most kidnappings go unreported and only the most horrifying cases ever make headlines.

In hopes of avoiding a similar fate, migrants pay smugglers upwards of $14,000 to ferry them from Guatemala or Honduras to a given city in the U.S., usually taking out loans at exorbitant interest rates and putting up their family’s land for collateral to pay the fee. The trip is marketed as all-inclusive, including not only food but also the fee paid to cartels to pass through territory they control.

The vast majority paid a smuggler at some point in their journey. Most of that money traveled through U.S. financial institutions. Migrants rarely carry cash because it’s too dangerous, and wire transfers offer a degree of protection against theft.

The low-budget option is to make the trek north without a smuggler and just pay for the border crossing into the U.S., which runs from a couple hundred to a couple thousand dollars. Payment is non-negotiable.

“The cartel has its rules,” said one smuggler in Juarez who asked to go by the name Spider. “Those who don’t pay are disappeared.”

At 43, Spider has been in the smuggling business for 20 years. Back when he was 13, he could cross freely into El Paso. Now he charges $1,500-$1,800 for the same trip. A third of the fee goes to the cartel that controls his portion of the Rio Grande. To reach Dallas, the price goes up to $5,500. He said he'd crossed 12 people the day before. His preferred wire service is MoneyGram, but he also collects using Elektra, BanCoppel, and others.

Spider's money is picked up by a rotating cast of family, friends, and acquaintances whom he has trained on what to say if questioned. If the teller asks who sent the money, for example, they should say a relative—but a distant one, like a stepfather or brother-in-law—or even a lover. His people can usually collect up to four payments with one company before they are frozen out, he said, but after a few months they're back in business.

"It's a sweet deal for everyone," Spider said. "Even the people picking up the money make $25 for every deposit." ... The smuggling doesn't end at the U.S. border. Once migrants cross the Rio Grande, they are typically handed off to another member of the organization, who drives them to a safe house where they wait for payment to be collected before they are freed or continue north.

Ramón, a smuggler in Arizona, is a U.S. citizen who makes around $1,200 per trip transporting up to six people at a time from the border to Phoenix or Tucson. He compared the service to a travel agency, with the coyotes as "agents" who refer clients, and him as the "chauffeur" driving the last leg of the journey.

"It's a real ego stroke, to be honest," Ramón said. "If you get them across, they're like, 'Thank you, thank you so much.'"

The line between smuggling and kidnapping can be blurry, with people held for days or weeks at stash houses until they pay what's owed—and sometimes more. Ramón recalled witnessing a stash house worker threaten someone by firing gunshots into the air: "He was like, 'You have to hurry, get all these account numbers otherwise I'm going to have to call this guy's mom and tell her why her son is tied up.'"

Evidence of extortion payments connected to stash houses in the U.S. shows up in receipts we reviewed. One family in New Jersey used the money transfer service Walmart2Walmart to send two payments totaling $1,000 to free family members held in Texas.

Ramón said...“The way they send transfers of money hasn’t changed in probably 30 years,” he said. “I have some buddies that can do some crazy things with bitcoin, but I'm not that cool. It's old-school.”

Other kidnapping victims also shared money transfer receipts. Using the recipient names, we located some of the individuals responsible for collecting the ransoms in a matter of minutes, just by searching on Facebook. One man who ignored our messages lives in the Mexican border city of Nuevo Laredo. He lists his occupation as “Boss of Los Zetas,” a notoriously violent cartel, though he looks to be 20 at most. He picked up a $1,500 money transfer from Mastercard subsidiary Transfast, one of four payments sent in the kidnapping of an Ecuadorian family trying to reach the U.S.

[We] reviewed 40 ransom payments made through money transfers in eight different kidnapping cases from 2014 through January of this year. Virtually all of the money flowed through U.S. companies, mostly through Western Union and MoneyGram but also Walmart and lesser-known companies like Ria. By our rough estimate, criminal organizations in Mexico have made around $800 million on migrant kidnappings alone over the past decade, and money-transfer companies received a cut on nearly every transaction through fees and exchange rates. ...

Ransom payments are a drop in the bucket compared to the fees people willingly fork over to be smuggled into the U.S. American companies profit from these deals too, through relatives wiring money to the coyotes. The cost of crossing illegally ranges from $150 to $15,000, depending on the stretch of the border, the destination in the U.S, and where the journey began. The total paid to smugglers, mostly through wire transfers, is in the range of $2 billion annually, according to law enforcement and think tank estimates....

Money transfer companies and U.S. authorities have tools to track the millions of dollars being sent to human smugglers and kidnapers. But most of the information gets lost in a web of bureaucracy.

When companies spot something shady, such as a large transaction or structuring, they are obligated to file a “Suspicious Activity Report,” or SAR, with the U.S. Treasury Department. The system is an information black hole. Last year, companies filed 2.5 million SARs, so many that the database of reports is unwieldy almost to the point of uselessness, especially for kidnappings that involve relatively small dollar amounts.

“Their mandate was to be a filing cabinet, to be a data repository,” said Jimenez, the anti-money laundering expert. “Very few law enforcement use SARs as a starting point for an investigation. They use it as a supplement.”...

Money transfer companies have seen their fortunes rise in the years since Don’s kidnapping. Remittances to Latin America are a $100 billion-per-year industry. “Financial institutions along the spectrum, they’re making a killing,” said Richard Lee Johnson, a doctoral researcher at the University of Arizona who studies the relationship between debt and migration in Guatemala. “It’s a whole economy.”

Even DHS’s “United States-Mexico Binational Criminal Proceeds Study” found that:

CEs also hire individuals to move criminal proceeds through wire transfer companies like Western Union. For example, in February 2010, the Attorneys General of Arizona, California, New Mexico, and Texas announced a $94 million settlement agreement with Western Union. The company had been accused of allowing people who were working on behalf of Mexican CEs and human traffickers to wire funds from the United States to Mexico.

D. PAYING IT FORWARD INSTEAD OF OVERSEAS

The trend of the evidence we reviewed and set forth is this: TCOs, particularly those based in Mexico, are using the aliens under their control to commit crimes like human smuggling and kidnapping, as well as to launder the proceeds of criminal activity, and they are doing so increasingly through the use of remittances. We understand that this can occur at either end of the transaction, or both: cartels can have several aliens send transfers to a funnel account, which then makes a larger transfer to the cartel. Cartels can also compel aliens to send funds to small villages or large cities all along migration routes, where cartel agents retrieve them, possibly giving the alien’s family members some portion. In short, there are many opportunities to take a cut of these transfers, and TCOs avail themselves of every one.

We investigated this phenomenon ourselves. We subpoenaed financial transaction information from a number of Florida financial institutions and discovered, with FDLE’s assistance, a similar pattern of suspicious activities to certain locales south of the border. The conclusion is inescapable: just as the articles above described, there are some living among us who are facilitating this criminal activity, whether out of fear, greed, or simply from desire to bring others here without obeying the laws while doing so.

There are approximately 90 banks in Florida, and several hundred Money Transfer Organizations. We sent subpoenas to three banks and three MTOs, and asked them to provide data on the (a) number and (b) aggregate dollar value of transactions which met the following criteria:

- done within a specific one-year period
- originated from within Florida
- terminated outside the nation's borders
- represented non-commercial activity

The results were shocking.

Not counting children, most estimates indicate that there is a total of roughly 4 million people from other countries living in Florida (regardless of status). Yet,

In a single one-year period, these six institutions alone recorded nearly 17 million such transactions. These transactions had an aggregate value of 5.2 billion dollars.

This means an average of more than four transactions for every single alien in the state, with an average transaction value of $305. As we documented above, we also subpoenaed records which show a suspicious pattern of transfers into remote or odd areas; for example, Venezuelan people in Florida sending money in equal installments over four weeks to a remote area of Mexico. It strains all forms of credulity to think all these represent legitimate transfers.

The State of Oklahoma has also attempted to address this phenomenon. Years ago, the people of Oklahoma imposed a fee on wire transfers such as these that leave their state borders. We propose that our leaders should impose a similar statutory fee on all such transactions from Florida which leave the country. On the above set of transactions alone, a 1.5% fee would yield $7.8 million. Assuming these six financial institutions represent an overly-cautious estimate of 20% of the total transfers, the expected yield would be nearly $40 million.

Even discounting the opportunity to identify criminal activity and cut into cartel profits this represents, there are ample reasons to support such a fee. To begin with, this is a staggering amount of money which is leaving not just the economy of our state, but that of our entire country. It will never be taxed, spent, or invested into our state and its people. It is gone. Florida should recoup at least some portion of it, especially because these types of transfers are “ripe for criminal exploitation.” These funds may be from legitimate income, but may also be either earned illegally or the product of criminal activity.

In addition, the fees collected would support a number of other recommendations we have made, such as:

- increased funds for DCF and family courts to manage our UAC and SIJ proposals;
- for FDLE, law enforcement, and criminal justice agencies to investigate, interdict, and prosecute smugglers, cartels and their affiliates;
- assistance to the public education system to help serve new students; and
- to subsidize some of the possible costs to small businesses associated with beefed-up e-verify laws.

Oklahoma parcels their fee out to a listed set of agencies. Florida could do the same.

We understand that this proposal will not capture all such transactions, and will not necessarily stop illicit activity. We do not believe it to be a perfect solution. But to the extent it might make crime less convenient while helping the residents of our state and protecting at least some UAC, the perfect should not be the enemy of the good.

Oklahoma sets a modest fee of 1.5% on all outgoing wire transfers from the state to any destination, even domestically. The fee (raised from its original 1%) is a withholding against the state income tax; any person who wishes may claim it as a deduction when filing their state taxes. 96% do not, indicating that a massive portion of the transactions are likely made by those who are not paying state income tax—i.e., not legal. The report of the Oklahoma State Tax Commission, for the year 2018-2019, shows wire transfer fee receipts of $13,147,000. Oklahoma has a tiny fraction of the population of illegal aliens found in Florida.

Our proposal would impose a fee only on those transactions which originate inside Florida and leave the country. Florida has no state income tax. But we think essentially the same result as Oklahoma’s tax credit could be accomplished by including a provision whereby legal individuals might achieve a similar outcome: allow for a refund with certain conditions.

Upon filing a sworn request for each transaction sought to be refunded with the Office of Financial Regulation, containing the receipt for the transaction including wire transfer number, either a valid social security number or a valid taxpayer identification number, and valid state-issued photographic identification, the customer shall be entitled to a refund equal to the amount of the fee paid by the customer for the transaction.

We envision such a law might look something like this (patterned on the Oklahoma law):

Money and wire transmission fee - Quarterly remittance - Enforcement

A. Any licensee of a money transmission, transmitter or wire transmitter business pursuant to Florida Statutes shall collect a fee of Five Dollars ($5.00) for each transaction not in excess of Five Hundred Dollars ($500.00) and in addition to such fee an amount equal to one percent (1%) of the amount in excess of Five Hundred Dollars ($500.00) which originates within the State of Florida and terminates outside the United States or its sovereign territories, consulates, or military installations.

B. The fee prescribed by subsection A of this section shall be remitted quarterly to the Florida Department of Revenue in such manner as the Department may prescribe for such purpose. All required forms and remittances shall be filed with the Department not later than the fifteenth day of the month following the close of each calendar quarter.

C. The Department of Revenue shall apportion all revenues derived from the fee to [such agencies and funds as may be designated].

D. Every licensee and their delegates shall post a notice on a form prescribed by the Department of Revenue that notifies customers that upon filing a sworn request for each transaction sought to be refunded with the Office of Financial Regulation, containing a receipt for the transaction including wire transfer number, either a valid social security number or a valid taxpayer identification number, and valid state-issued photographic identification, the customer shall be entitled to a refund equal to the amount of the fee paid by the customer for the transaction.

E. The Department of Law Enforcement shall be afforded all provisions currently under law to enforce the provisions of subsection B of this section. If a licensee fails to file reports or fails to remit the fee authorized by subsection B of this section, the Office of Financial Regulation shall have the authority pursuant to Florida Statutes to suspend the license of the licensee and its delegates. A notification of the suspension shall also be sent to the Office of Attorney General. The licensee and its delegates may not reapply for a license until all required reports have been filed and all required fee amounts have been remitted.

F. Upon request from the Office of the Attorney General, the Office of Financial Regulation may make a claim against the surety bond of the licensee on behalf of the State.

CONCLUSIONS

This overview illustrates the current realities posing physical and financial dangers to the residents of Florida. If there is an over-arching theme that we have discovered that is endemic to the tributaries of illegal immigration to which we have been exposed during our past year of intensive work it is this: when every community is a border community, the perils presented to us will inevitably follow. "As long as it stays in Mexico" is an illusion of well-being in this country which has been shattered.

We believe that for too long, it has been left to the people of a few communities and states to suffer a disproportionate share of the effects of the policies we have described. For too long, somnolence has been the reaction by those who benefit from the illusion of geographic separation and remain numb to events occurring first outside, then at, then around our nation's borders. We ourselves were not as cognizant as we wish we had been of how decisions made in the District of Columbia are profoundly, and apparently intentionally, producing what is nothing short of a humanitarian disaster.

There are, however, things that Florida can do about it, starting with the list on page 142.

Whether one believes the purposes behind current federal policies are appropriate or abominable, and whether their execution is masterly or maladroit, it is beyond real dispute that the current state of affairs is a predictable consequence of those policies.

These are the current policies, and these are their observed effects.

Thomas Gray was famous for positing that “if ignorance is bliss, ‘tis folly to be wise.” When it comes to the subjects we were mandated to investigate, we found that there are many who do not recognize the scope and severity because they perceive it not to be affecting their day-to-day existence.

This is not bliss.

In previous Presentments, we have cited Florida’s Standard Jury Instruction about Willful Blindness:

Florida law recognizes a concept known as willful blindness, which is sometimes referred to as “deliberate avoidance of positive knowledge.” Willful blindness occurs when a person has his or her suspicion aroused about a particular fact, realized its probability, but deliberately refrained from obtaining confirmation because he or she wanted to remain in ignorance. A person who engages in willful blindness is deemed to have knowledge of that fact.

This concept should apply with equal force in this situation. Lack of awareness of the policies, the problems – the atrocities—we have described, is no longer an option.

We choose wisdom and knowledge, even though it is certainly not blissful. Pretending there are not policies in existence, that they have no effect on our state because they are exercised on the other side of a map line, is folly—not bliss.

THIS is no longer acceptable.

Because THIS

Darien Gap

NGO Camp

US Border

is also unacceptable.

Florida is not helpless, and should wait no longer to protect its interests, its residents, and its immigrant population from the problems we have described. We urge our fellow citizens to become aware and educated about these issues, and our leaders to take swift and direct action.

We have done our best to be thorough in our investigation. We have worked hard to obtain multiple sources of information and perspectives on issues. We have chosen our words with care, after significant deliberation. While we understand that there may be some who seek a reason to discredit our work, we are comfortable that it represents a sound set of conclusions, logically derived from facts, testimony, and evidence.

We believe our findings are accurate, and our rationales legitimate. We would like any audience to know that we are a large and diverse group, who showed up at the courthouse more than a year ago and have labored independently ever since to answer the questions posed in our mandate. We believe we have made great progress in that mission.

RECOMMENDATIONS (DIGEST)

1. We recommend that our leaders consider the formation of another Statewide Grand Jury solely to investigate the questionable activities of Non-Government Organizations doing immigration business in or with our state, especially the misuse of grant funds, avoidance of transparency in use of public funds, and contravention of state laws.
2. We reiterate here our recommendation from our Third and Fourth Presentments: require any UAC “sponsor” who is not a biological parent or court-ordered legal guardian to submit themselves and the UAC to the family court for such a formal legal determination.
3. Further, we ask our leaders to immediately close the SIJ visa loophole by requiring petitions under Chapter 39.01 to either (a) be filed by the Department of Children and Families or (b) require that any minor being deemed dependent be formally placed in custody of the Department.
4. We believe Florida should begin tracking data regarding the immigration status of arrestees, and mandate its reporting to FDLE for retention and publication. We recommend that our leaders adopt a law requiring the Department of Corrections, each County Sheriff, and the Chief of Police of any law enforcement agency in this state to provide such data to FDLE along with the other data they are already sending.
5. Moreover, given the large number of inmates reflected by SCAAP and the Texas DPS data who had been ordered removed but remained to commit more crimes, we recommend that our leaders look into adding a sentencing enhancement provision such as that below which would increase the exposure for those who have been previously deported and return to commit a felony offense in our state.

921.0024(1)(a) Sentencing multipliers:

Prior Removal/Deportation: If the offender has been previously deported or removed from the United States pursuant to law, the subtotal sentence points are multiplied by 1.5.

We also believe it would be appropriate for our State leaders to enhance the sentence for a person convicted of a criminal offense who is proven to be a member of a cartel or TCO, much as is the case already with enhanced sentencing for gang membership.

6. We think our elected officials should again consider strong legislative mandates regarding universal documentation requirements, and notification to potential employers and victims of these crimes.

7. We propose that our leaders should impose a modest statutory fee on all wire transactions from Florida which leave the country.

Money and wire transmission fee - Quarterly remittance - Enforcement.

A. Any licensee of a money transmission, transmitter or wire transmitter business pursuant to Florida Statutes shall collect a fee of Five Dollars ($5.00) for each transaction not in excess of Five Hundred Dollars ($500.00) and in addition to such fee an amount equal to one percent (1%) of the amount in excess of Five Hundred Dollars ($500.00) which originates within the State of Florida and terminates outside the United States or its sovereign territories, consulates, or military installations.

B. The fee prescribed by subsection A of this section shall be remitted quarterly to the Florida Department of Revenue in such manner as the Department may prescribe for such purpose. All required forms and remittances shall be filed with the Department not later than the fifteenth day of the month following the close of each calendar quarter.

C. The Department of Revenue shall apportion all revenues derived from the fee to the [agency or fund as the legislature may deem appropriate].

D. Every licensee and their delegates shall post a notice on a form prescribed by the Department of Revenue that notifies customers that upon filing a notarized request for each transaction sought to be refunded with the Office of Financial Regulation, containing a receipt for the transaction including wire transfer number, either a valid social security number or a valid taxpayer identification number, and valid state-issued photographic identification, the customer shall be entitled to a refund equal to the amount of the fee paid by the customer for the transaction.

E. The Department of Law Enforcement shall be afforded all provisions currently under law to enforce the provisions of subsection B of this section. If a licensee fails to file reports or fails to remit the fee authorized by subsection B of this section, the Office of Financial Regulation shall have the authority pursuant to Florida statutes to suspend the license of the licensee and its delegates. A notification of the suspension shall also be sent to the Office of Attorney General. The licensee and its delegates may not reapply for a license until all required reports have been filed and all required fee amounts have been remitted.

F. Upon request from the Office of the Attorney General, the Office of Financial Regulation may make a claim against the surety bond of the licensee on behalf of the State.

8. We recommend that our lawmakers assess the feasibility of either requiring general contractors to ultimately be fully and directly legally responsible for ensuring their subcontractors hire only legal workers, or requiring any employee staffing agency or any person or business which provides employees to work for another, to register with the state's Department of Labor and be bound by Florida's new e-verify requirements. We also suggest that the "25-employee exemption" to e-verify requirements be eliminated.
9. We strongly urge the legislature to delete Florida Statute § 908.104(8) in its entirety and Florida Statute § 908.104(5) must be limited to crimes occurring in the United States and time barred to five years prior to an alien's claim of relief under the statute. Additionally, the Florida Legislature must bar an alien with pending criminal charges for any crime or attempt to commit any crime of violence, felony drug offense involving the sale, manufacturing, distribution, or trafficking in a controlled substance, or felony sexual offense from being eligible for relief.
10. TCOs / cartels should be equated with, and designated as, foreign terrorist organizations under 8 U.S.C. 1189, to unlock certain additional methods for lawfully combatting them. We realize our State cannot make such a designation, but we recommend that our federal representatives seriously entertain such a measure.

Respectfully submitted to the Honorable Ellen S. Masters, Presiding Judge of the Twenty-First Statewide Grand Jury, this 17th day of November, 2023.
